VETERANS' News Letter

Area veterans and next of kin who filed claims for Prisoner-of War benefits with the War Claims Commission in Washington, D. C., were requested today to be patient as everything is being done to process their claims as rapidly as possible.

Richard J. Dzimian, State Veterans' Affairs, Belmont, New York explained that word had been received from the War Claims Commission that it does not have enough personnel to handle the volume of mail it has received during the past months nor enough claim workers to process the claims as soon as they are docketed.

More than 125,000 completed claims forms have been received by the commission within four months after the forms were released for distribution. They came from every State, Territory many foreign countries and even from ships at sea.

Several thousands of other pieces of mail also reached the Commission, most of which required answers. During this time, the Commission had a total staff of sixty persons to do all its work, including opening mail, numbering and acknowledging claims, adjusicating, certifying for payment, replying to correspondence, reporting on legislation and preparing the report on war claims.

For further information on this, or other veteran's benefits, Counslor Dzimian can be contacted at the Court House in Belmont, New York.

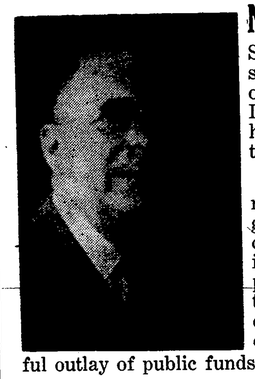
Remember the Number

THAT NOMINATES THIS MAN



NEXT Tuesday, you will nominate a Sheriff. I am now serving you in that office. On the record I have made, it is my hope you will choose to elect me again.

I have steadfastly maintained that, regardless of times or conditions, the Sheriff's Department can perform its part of the county operation completely and efficiently without wasteful outlay of public funds.

I am proud that as your present Sheriff, I have conducted that office as an experienced business man and that costs of operation were so controlled that there can be no merited criticism of extravagance with the taxpayers' money.

If you agree that "JONES IS A GOOD SHERIFF," I shall deeply appreciate your support. Your "X" at the seventh name on the ballot will do it.

Fair Visitors To See How To Design Barns to Make Use of Sun

Farmers attending the New York State Fair Sept. 9-16 will see a demonstration of an ingenious device that shows how to take advantage of the sun's healthful rays when designing buildings for cows, pigs and chickens.

The instrument, known as a Solarometer, can depict the angle at which the sun will shine on a buildnig in any part of the United States or Canada at any time of any day. With this information, it is possible to design structures with large window areas and roof overhangs so the high-riding sun of summer is excluded and the warming rays of winter are admitted.

Experiments are being conducted at a number of state agricultural colleges, with cow barns and hog houses built with large glass areas to admit sunlight for the purpose of preventing moisture and aiding sanitation. The milk house of the model dairy barn at the fair is set up in this way with Thermopane windows to minimize the transfer of heat and to reduce fogging and condensation.
