
OR KILLER?

Cars are not killers by themselves . . .

you can really trust an automobile these days. Mechanically, they are a pretty safe proposition. But you can't always trust the man or woman at the wheel. Most of the traffic accidents this vacation season — by a tremendous margin — will be due to HUMAN FAILURE —not to anything going wrong with the car itself. Drivers will fall asleep. They will pass on hills and curves. They will take their eyes off the road for just a little instant. They will do other foolish things, forgetting that the impact of a collision at 60 miles per hour is precisely the same as driving a car off the roof of a fourteen story building.

Better Health For Children

A Community Service Issued by Children's Hospital of Buffalo, N. Y.

The Children's Hospital of Buffalo points out to parents of young children who are entering school for the first time that their introduction to school may have a lasting effect on their ability to get along with people and to adjust themselves to new circumstances.

Children cling to people and places which are familiar. Learning to get along with strangers in new surroundings is a step of major proportions. The younger the child the more dependent he is on his parents and the more he needs their patient, understanding guidance.

Parents should not be alarmed if their child rebels against school for the first week or ten days. All children suffer a temporary sense of insecurity at first, especially "only" children who have been used to playing with others. This feeling of insecurity manifests itself in various ways, but only rarely is a child so upset that his mother cannot leave him at school. Under such circumstances, however, it is better to let him get used to the new routine gradually—perhaps by visiting school for a few minutes several times until his interest and confidence are sufficiently established so that he wants to join the other children.

Not uncommonly children who have just started school refuse their usual breakfast because of nervous excitement. It is better to let them go to school with only milk and fruit juice than to upset them further by forcing them to eat. A light breakfast will do no harm for a few days. If your child is cross and irritable after school, it may be that this new experience is too exciting. The parent is advised to discuss such problems with the teacher in private. Through her experience with many children she can offer helpful advice which may solve the problem.

One of the most important functions of school is to teach children to adapt themselves to the daily demands of life and to get along with others. Children who do not learn these things become badly adjusted adults and poor adjustment reacts adversely on mental and physical health. Parents who are patient and try to help their child enjoy school are investing in his lifelong health and happiness.

THE GRANGE NEWSLETTER

by E. PAYSON SMITH

NATIONAL GRANGE Master Albert S. Goss has been quoted many times in this column, and always for his policy-making utterances which have carried great weight in agricultural affairs, both here and abroad. At this time of crisis, Mr. Goss has brought forward a Grange Action Program for Defense, whose recommendations apply to all of us who are interested in maintaining our democratic way in the face of the obvious opposition challenging us. It applies to us all, whether we be farm folks, industrial workers, merchants, professional or business men or women.

Politically Mr. Goss specifically recommends closer liaison between Congress and the Administration in mustering the nation's full economic and military efforts behind national defense by the appointment of a Congressional bi-partisan committee to work closely with, and establish better relations between the Executive and Adminstrative branches of our government.

"If such a liaison had been established during World War I, Mr. Goss points out, "there probably would have been no bitter conflict over the League of Nations. It is probably also that if such a committee had been in existence in World War II our policy mistakes at Yalta and in our dealings with Asia could have been avoided."

Mr. Goss emphasized that the United States must recognize how critical is our position in world affairs, and traced the steps by which in the past five years we have slipped from the position of most powerful and influential nation on earth, leading the whole world to a program of peace, to a nation on the defensive against attacks of all kinds on all fronts, and threatened by a foe that is far better prepared.

"As a nation we should not waste time in discussing who is to blame for our vacillating policy toward Russia and our failure to recognize her true intentions earlier," Mr. Goss said, "but our first task is to prepare to defend ourselves and the United Nations against armed aggression. Russia may not want war yet, but her intention to fight to attain her ends are now unmistakably clear, and we know her aim to be the destruction of all free nations and world domination of communism. It is not unlikely that we are seeing the beginning of a world-wide social revolution which may either engulf the world in further war and unprecedented bloodshed, or fought out at a slower pace over a quarter of a century or more. We must continue our world leadership for peace, but be wholly prepared for war."

Can Save By Using More Lime

How can the New York State farmer invest one dollar and save ten?

By spreading more lime, says Prof. S. R. Aldrich, Cornell University agronomist.

In Cornell rotation experiments, at three levels of fertility, lime at the rate of one ton in four years, or one and one-half tons in six years, produced extra feed equal to a ton of grain in the six-year rotation.

Since grain costs about ten times as much a ton as lime, it amounts to about a 10 for 1 return, says Aldrich.

Careful estimates show that New York farmers need to use about two million tons of lime each year for the next ten years. For maintenance alone, 1,250,000 tons are needed. Last year farmers bought 625,000 tons. Probably half the farmers aren't convinced that it pays to use lime, according to Aldrich, but he says they couldn't make a better investment.

The Board of Trade

Hubby: "So you have changed your laundry?"

Wifey: "Yes; but how did you know?"

Hubby: "Oh, instead of getting Brown's and Green's shirts now, I am getting some strange garments I have never worn before."

Speaks for Itself

"Can you read that man's face?"

"You don't have to. When he opens the lower part of it he tells all he knows."
