

THE GRANGE.

...a trouble, better, more useful citizen. This view may seem visionary. But for a moment call to mind many of the hard working farmers, many your associates, who have isolated themselves from the ordinary influences of society—men who have remained wealthy not so much by making as by accumulating. Many, however, who have accumulated wealth at first to their injury, and afterwards to their ruin. They have neglected their physical health, and their constant application of physical force from early morn till late night, without a day's rest, has brought them to the verge of ruin. They have neglected their mental and social culture. It is strange that the amenities of these men become a burden to them. They are often asked to give their services to the Grange, and they are often asked to give their services to the Grange, and they are often asked to give their services to the Grange.

...But so few of the Grange members are so well supplied with the amenities of life. They are often asked to give their services to the Grange, and they are often asked to give their services to the Grange, and they are often asked to give their services to the Grange. They are often asked to give their services to the Grange, and they are often asked to give their services to the Grange, and they are often asked to give their services to the Grange.

...We would not have any one imply that we have any special interest in the Grange, but we have a special interest in the Grange, and we have a special interest in the Grange. We have a special interest in the Grange, and we have a special interest in the Grange, and we have a special interest in the Grange.

...We have a special interest in the Grange, and we have a special interest in the Grange, and we have a special interest in the Grange. We have a special interest in the Grange, and we have a special interest in the Grange, and we have a special interest in the Grange.

...We have a special interest in the Grange, and we have a special interest in the Grange, and we have a special interest in the Grange. We have a special interest in the Grange, and we have a special interest in the Grange, and we have a special interest in the Grange.
