Library News

"World Enough and Time". This is another impressive novel by Robert Penn Warren, author of "All the King's Men." The story is based on the life of a young lawyer, Jeremiah Beaumont. Col. Fort, his benefactor, takes Beaumont from the backwoods of Kentucky and offers him law training. The story continues with Beaumont's involvement in politics and Rachel Jordan for whose sake Beaumont murders his benefactor. The book is less real, less solid than "All the King's Men," but a wiser and more profound book.

"Yankee Exodus," by Stewart Holbrook. If you are third generation American your grandfather or at least your great uncle may be mentioned in this book. Mr. Holbrook's concern is why the New Englander moved out, where he went and what he did when he got where he was going. Six of Wisconsin's governors were sons of New England parents. Mr. Holbrook is a native of Vermont and now lives in Oregon. "Yankee Exodus" is good reading at this time of year when our thoughts are of Plymouth Rock and the Pilgrims.

By the way, have you read the "Plymouth Adventure" by Gebler?

"Kon Tiki." It all began with the dream of young Thor Heyerdahl as he listened to the tales about a white sun god, Kon Tiki, who was set adrift from Peru on a raft and was carried across the treacherous Pacific by the waves and tides. In order to test this theory, six young adventurers drifted for 101 days on a raft. For 4,300 miles on their raft made from logs from a jungle in Ecudor they drifted thru shark infested waters, through mountainous waves until at last their raft smashed against a reef on a Pacific isle and they waded ashore. The native chief inquired about Bing Crosby.
