How To Clean Marble

Tables and chests with marble tops—once banished to the attic—are back in the front parlor again. Sometimes after long disuse the marble is a bit dingy and needs a cleaning.

How do you clean marble? For water stains, use kerosene to wipe the marble top and then rinse with clear water. Or you may rub the stain with a paste made of soda and water or powdered whiting and water and then rinse with water.

To get rid of rust stains, wash them with oxalic acid and rinse well soon after you apply the acid. Or wash with household ammonia or a paste of soda and water and rinse thoroughly with water. For grease spots use carbon tetrachloride or rub with a paste of borax and lemon juice and rinse well.

Methyl: "Which are you going to do?"

The Difference

Hee — "What's the difference between a gown and creation?"
She — "I coundn't tell the exact figures, but it's a small fortune."

Good Shears Need Care

If the shears around the house "won't cut butter," chances are somebody's overworked them on jobs never intended for respectable shears. Why not have the shears sharpened? Good places for this work are those that specialize in sharpening barber's scissors.

Once you get the shears back in fine cutting fettle, keep the points protected with a cork when the shears are not in action and limit their use to proper jobs. Don't for instance, let Sonny snitch the shears to pry off the lid of a paint can or let Sister take them to cut carboard. About every six month, give the shears an oiling by putting a drop or two of machine oil on both sides of the screw that holds the blades together. Work the blades back and forth to spread the oil where needed.

No Ripples, No Bumps For Braided Rugs

Here's a hint to the homemaker who's about to put together a new braided rug. Before you sew braid to the rug, pin the braid in place with safety pins but leave about 4 inches free at the end. This method allows you to make the proper adjustments that prevent rippling or cupping of the rug. Another way to help keep out humps and bumps from a braided rug is to spread it on a large table or on the floor, so that the rug is flat as you work.

Outdoor Fireplace

An outdoor fireplace with hot dogs or hamburgers sizzling on the grate is one of the happy thoughts that pop into mind with the first glimpse of crocuses and daffodils. If you're planning to build a fireplace in the backyard this year, it's not too soon to talk over the best location with the family.

Specialists at Cornell's College of Agriculture suggest that you first make sure of not violating any local fire regulations in placing the fireplace. You can build an outdoor fireplace into a house chimney by providing a seperate flue, and nearness to the kitchen offers convenience in carrying food and utensils back and forth. A fireplace without a chimney should face prevailing winds so that smoke will be blown away from the cook and the table. If you can plan your picnic area with a shade tree at the west or southwest, you will find that the trees provides shade for table or chairs.

How to Store Dry Milk

No one has yet dreamed up an appealing name for non-fat dry milk solids, but the convenience of its use and other favorable points make up for any lack of glamour in the title. Dry milk takes up little shelf room and keeps well when stored properly. Be sure to put dry milk in a jar or can with a tight-fitting cover. Stored thus, it will stay fresh for several months in temperatures no higher than 75 degrees F. which is about the average kitchen temperature. In hot weather, store dry milk, tightly covered, in the refrigerator. If left open to the air, the powder may take up moisture and become lumpy.

Pin Stipes Restored

Pin stripes that have worn off at the knees or elbows of a suit can be restored with machine stitching, according to U. S. Department of Agriculture specialists. Since the material as well as the stripes are likely worn at these places, it's a good idea to reinforce them while you do the restriping.

Use rayon lining pieces for reinforcement and baste them on the underside of the worn spots. Use white thread for the bobbin and a spool of thread to match the stripes for the top stitching. Tighten the top tension so that the white thread will be drawn to the surface to give the same effect as the stripe. You will need to experiment with a scrap of wool until the tension adjustment is right. Then stitch along the old stripe lines. Tie and clip the thread ends on the inside of the suit.

Foods To Freeze

Your home freezer can save you time when you need it if in your spare moments you fix soups and stews and sandwiches and other foods and freeze them for future use. But before you spend your precious hours in cooking and baking for the freezer, make sure you will save time in the end. Some foods take longer to prepare for the table after they're frozen than they do when they're mixed up and cooked fresh.
