Better Health For Children

A Community Service Issued by Children's Hospital of Buffalo, N. Y.

Although modern methods of diagnosis and treatment have greatly reduced the incidence and severity of diarrhea, it is still a serious disease in children and babies. Doctors at the Children's Hospital point out that there are two main causes of diarrhea. One is due to nutritional inadequacies or indiscretions and the other to germs. The latter type is often highly infectious and may occur in epidemic form. Any attack of diarrhea should be immediately reported to the family doctor.

Diarrhea occurs more frequently during the hot weather when there is greater chance of milk and food contamination from germs. Germs are carried by flies and it is therefore important to protect babies and their food from contact with them. Another recommended precaution is the use of pasteurized, evaporated or boiled milk. All bottles and utensils used in the preparation of food or formula should be thoroughly sterilized before use. Since germs are also transmitted by handling, whoever takes care of an infant should wash his hands thoroughly before handling him or preparing his food.

Since diarrhea, or the type which is brough on by dietary factors, is more easily treated than the germ type of infection. The doctor will usually change the diet or, in the case of infants, may recommend that boiled water or skim milk be substituted for one or two feedings. Such treatment is generally effective in a short time. If diarrhea persists or becomes worse, it is best to have the child treated in a hospital where modern methods of diagnosis and treatment are immediately available.

Conservation of sulfur products is vital if New York farmers are to have enough for essential needs. The government has cut domestic consumption 15 to 20 per cent to build up the nation's stockpile and to meet the demands of the Korean war and the defense program.

Picnic Shelf

That merry plea, "Let's have a picnic, Mom, now," can be met in short order if you keep a picnic shelf ready and are willing to spare the time. Remember, the children won't always be young and the sun doesn't always shine. So when Old Man Weather gives his blessing, why not have fun out-of-doors?

Now the picnic shelf: What you put on it will depend upon the picnic fancies of the family. You may want to stock sandwich spreads and canned sausage and those packaged powders for fruit drinks, crackers, cookies, and maybe marshmallows to be toasted. Of course, the picnic basket, thermos jug, paper napkins and plates should be handy. The main idea is to keep everything on tap so you can enjoy your outing before that old sun slides under a cloud.

Aid for Slippery Fabrics

For slippery fabrics that slide and slip and try the temper of even the most patient home seamstress, specialists at the New York State College of Home Economics at Cornell suggest these sewing aids:

1. A piece of oilcloth to be spread wrong-side up on the cutting table. The rough texture helps to hold your fabric in place and provides a good cutting surface.

2. Ordinary building bricks, padded and covered with cloth to secure slippery materials while you cut out the pattern pieces.

You can also use these bricks as an aid for simple basting or hemming of fairly straight edges. Lay a section to be hemmed on the padded brick and pin the goods to the covering. When you have hemmed that section, unpin the goods, and move the material along to the next part.

Pressure Gauge

Annual reminder to homemakers who can vegetables: Now is the time to check the dial gauge on your pressure cooker. Before you run smack-dab into the canning season it's wise to know that your dial gauge, whether old or new, registers accurate pounds of pressure. How well your canned goods keep depends a great deal on right temperatures in caning.

Ask your county home demonstration agent or your dealer or manufacturer to check your gauge. If you use the canner often you'll want it checked again during the canning season.

Time to Clean the Condenser

Before the hot weather taxes your refrigerator, it's wise to dust the condenser, say specialists. A dust-ridden condenser may cause the motor to be overworked especially in hot weather.

In electric refrigerators, the condensor is located either in the motor compartment or at the back of the refrigerator. You will recognize it as a series of metal fins and coils which release the heat from the food compartment into the outside air. To clean the condenser, use a stiff brush or the dusting tool of the vacuum cleaner. Or blow off dust with the blowing end of the vacuum cleaner. Always disconnect an electric refrigerator before you clean the condenser.

The 1-2-3 of Kitchen Arrangement

If your home improvement plans include a new kitchen arrangement, you may be interested in these guides set up by the specialists at the New York State College of Home Economics at Cornell.

1: Try not to have doors between your pieces of kitchen equipment. Every time you pass a door to get from the stove to the sink or from the sink to the refrigerator, you walk five or six feet farther than if there were no door. L or U-shaped kitchen arrangement make possible the placement of equipment without doors between.

2: Place some of the equipment at a right angle to the other. Equipment so placed shortens the walking distance between your units.

3: Allow enough space for workers to move around one another comfortably. Space for a second worker is more easily provided in an L-kitchen than in a U-kitchen since the single corner and the two sides of an L-arrangement are less restricting than the two corners and three sides of a U-arrangement.

Many men are pessimists when it comes to buying—but they like to buy from an optimist.

New York farm real estate is valued at one-and a-quarter billion dollars, machinery at a quarter-billion, and livestock at a third-billion dollars.

The Katahdin variety of potatoes is grown on more than half of the potato acreage in New York. It is not exceptionally high in yield or resistance to late blight or scab, but it is dependable and produces good yields of marketable potatoes year after year.
