HOMEMAKER'S Dispatch

Wash Day Short Cuts

Someone once said that to manage a home a woman needs to be one-fourth glamor and three-fourths truck horse. Whether you agree or not, you must admit she needs muscle to hang out the family wash.

Specialists at the New York State College of Home Economics at Cornell have found in a survey that hanging out the average family wash for one year amounts to lifting the equivalent of a 2½-ton truck. Homemakers, however, can make the work easier. The specialists suggest hanging one clothesline waist high and the other at the usual height.

On the lower ropes, socks, handkerchiefs, children's clothes, and any other small items can be hung. Sheets and towels can go on the higher line. Then, much back-breaking bending can be avoided if the clothes basket is mounted on wheels—set in Junior's coaster wagon, for example, or in a special cart made for the purpose.

Can Good Fruit

Canning is a thrifty practice but not if you can poor produce. One "bad" tomato or peach, for instance, can ruin your whole batch of canned goods -- whether it's catsup, tomato juice, peach preserves, or canned peaches or tomatoes. So don't use the fruits or tomatoes with spoiled spots. Even when you cut out a generous portion of the good part with the bad, an off flavor still remains and is likely to penetrate the rest of the batch.

Clothes for Daughter

If you and daughter are planning her college wardrobe for the fall, you'll be interested to know that Cornell's 1400 women students in a recent survey judged skirts, sweaters, and blouses to be the most popular items. "Separates" appeal because they offer a variety of combinations and can be bought at different times when the money in the budget is not enough for a whole outfit.

One question on the questionaire was: "What do you consider a minimum wardrobe for the entering freshman?" The average answer listed: Two formals, three date dresses, two suits, four skirts, five sweaters, and five blouses. School dresses were omitted entirely.

Of course, there's no reason for you or daughter to take such a list too seriously. Many a college gal is getting along on less; some have more. The list is however, a guide to the college trend as of 1951.

Not Much "Eat" in "Meat"

Camp Cook.—"Did you bring the meat?"
Scout.—"Sure, I got six cents' worth of steak."
Camp Cook.—"Are you crazy?"
Scout.—"No! I paid fifty cents for it."

Many people have a good aim in life, but too few of them know when to pull the trigger.

Geography Inspires Swiss to Innovation

Geography is the mother of invention in the land of the edelweiss and alpenstock.

The news that icy Alpine lakes are doing duty as giant "deep freezers" for food storage is but another example of the ingenuity with which the Swiss have made te most of a mountainous land only slightly larger than the combined areas of Vermont, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

By converting geographic liabilities into assets, the people have secured a high level of prosperity, a traditionally democratic government and a well established neutrality.

The Swiss Alps, for example, seemed to have little to offer, orignally, beyond spectacular beauty. Covering two-thirds of the nation's land area, the mountains were poor in minerals, however rich they might be in awsome expanses of barren rock, or fields of ice and snow. Moreover, they served to isolate the inhabitants and posed a major problem in communication and transportation.

The invention of a practical steam locomotive in the early 19th century gave the Alps an economic new look. It brought the lucrative Swiss tourist industry into being and simultaneously paved the way for a more complete integration of the country. Switzerland was among the first ten nations to establish railroads. Today the country claims the densest railway system in the world with more than 3,600 miles of track, reaching into every segment of the diminutive land.

With the railroads came thousands of tourists—sightseers and sportsmen—who found Swiss hospitality an art. By 1943 Switzerland had over 7,000 hotels and an international reputation for the finest housekeeping.

Chickens Number Over 25 Million in State

Albany, Aug 6—The 25,862,000 chickens being raised on New York farms this year is nearly 15 percent more than in 1950. This number of chickens is the largest raised by New York farmers since the 1943-45 period when red meats were acutely short, according to a federal-state report.

The increase in number of chickens being raised is, in part, a reflection of the relatively favorable financial returns from poultry and eggs in relation to the cost of feed. Practically all states are increasing the number of chickens this year, but increases in the central and southern states, however, are at a smaller rate than in the Northeast so that the number in the United States is only five percent larger than in 1950.

Baby chick hatching in commercial hatcheries in New York during the first six months were 11 percent more than for the same period last year.

Canning and Freezing Demonstrations

Two food preservation meetings are announced by Home Demonstration Agents to help you have apetizing nutritious food all year round.

The demonstrations will be held Wednesday, August 15 at the Scio Central School and Friday, August 17, at the Fillmore Central School.

These meetings will begin promptly at 1:30 p. m. You will see a demonstration on freezing fruits, such as peaches and strawberries and vegetables such as peas and beans. Packaging materials will also be discussed. There will be an exhibit of canned goods and the care and use of a pressure cooker will be explained. If you haven't had your pressure cooker gauge tested this year, bring the gauge and it will be tested for you. Refreshments will be served.
