Public Warned Against Poisoning By Parathion

Albany, Aug. 29—New York State residents are warned by the State Health Department to take extreme precauions against poisoning by the insecticide parathion.

The solution is used in many cases for spraying gardens and farm fields and is so highly toxic that people who have walked thru fields as much as 48 hours after spraying have become dangerously ill.

Dr. Herman E. Hilleboe; State Health Commissioner, urges that farm workers and gardeners avoid working in fields for at least five days after parthion-spraying has been carried on. The material may be absorbed thru the skin, or be breathed in through the nose or mouth. The drug atropine is used as a specific therapy to neutralize the effect of the poison.

Dr. Hilleboe also urges that those who exhibit symtoms of poisoning after working in sprayed fields contact a physician immediately. Symptoms include headache, excessive sweating, giddiness and blurred vision, weakness, nausea, cramps, diarrhea and discomfort in the chest.

The Department's warning is issued after District Health officers from several counties in the state reported that farm workers had suffered illnesses after working in sprayed fields.
