Fall Cabbage Crop Below Last Year

Albany, Oct.—The fall cabbage crop in upstate New York is substantially less than a year ago, according to the federal-state crop report for October. Reduced plantings, along with lower yields per acre, account for the difference.

The Domestic type crop in 1951 will yield about 126,000 tons. This is 32 percent less tonnage than last season, although 13 percent more than the 10-year average. Cabbage of this type is preferred by kraut factories which use it in large quantities. New York is the leading state in the production of this important processed food product and has provided more than two-fifths the national output over a ten-year period.
