Better Health For Children

A Community Service Issued by Children's Hospital of Buffalo, N. Y.

Doctors at the Children's Hospital point out that the better care you give your child's baby teeth, the better the chances that his permanent teeth will be strong and healthy. Many doctors advocate the regular use of the new ammoniated dentifrices after meals as a preventive against decay, and advise leaving the dentifrice on the teeth rather than rinsing it off.

The first step, however, toward sound teeth is proper diet for the mother before the baby is born. She needs plenty of milk and other calcium-providing foods and in some instances her obstetrician may prescribe calcium tabets. After the baby arrives his diet should contain plenty of milk, daily cod liver oil or its equivalent, orange juice and, when old enough, meat and green vegetables.

Even baby teeth should be examined regularly by a dentist every 6 to 8 months so that need of extraction may be avioded. The longer a child retains the primary or baby teeth, the less chance there is of overcrowding the permanent teeth which are forming under the gums. Primary teeth also keep the jaw in its normal shape so that the child has a proper bite in chewing his food.

Refined sugar which is used in candy and sweet beverages causes decay, so that by limiting these foods teeth are less likely to develop cavities. The natural sugar found in fruit juices, fresh and dried fruits, raw vegetables, maple syrup and honey does less damage, and children who eat these foods instead of candy when they are hungry will have better teeth.

Unless children hear their parents describe painful dental experiences they are not apt to be afraid of the dentist but will regard him as a friend who will help them take care of their teeth. By emphasizing the importance of regular, thorough tooth care, parents can instill a sense of responsibility in the child which will avoid many large dental bills and will promote the child's general health. It is important to note that even if the child's teeth are treated with fluorine by the dentist and the community's water contains fluorine, it is still necessary to give the same thorough tooth care.

Feed bins on the farm can be made rat-proof by lining them with sheet metal or heavy screening.

HOMEMAKER'S Dispatch

Baked Apple Fillings

When you're stumped for dessert ideas, try stuffed baked apples. Specialists at Cornell offer several suggestions: Fill the cored apples with chopped fresh cranberries and sugar before you bake them. Or use crushed pineapple as the filling, and when the apples are baked top them with marshmallows and put them back in the oven for a few minutes.

Another stuffing that many homemakers have tried and liked is made of raisins, nuts, cinnamon and sugar. Serve these apples with cream, plain or whipped.

About Looks

Your appearance matters a great deal to your children. They like to see Mom and Dad stack up well beside other parents. At the same time, your attitude toward wrinkles and grey hairs and a double chin is important too.

If you can strive to look your best and still not fuss at the inevitable changes that time brings to everyone, your youngsters are likely to develop a healthy attitude toward their own looks. Johnny's big ears and Susie's straight hair need not cause tears if mother and father give physical appearance only its proper due and no more.

Church Supper Dishes

Quarternary ammonium compounds are a mouthful to say but they're good to know about when you're working on the dishwashing detail for a church or Grange supper. These compounds are used to sanitize dishes and silver and are effective in cold or hot water.

Specialists are Cornell suggest this diswashing procedure: For washing, use soap or other detergent and water about 120 degrees F. Rinse the dishes in clean warm water. Then dip them in a solution made with a quarternary ammonium compound. Directions for use are on each package. These compounds when dissolved are colorless and odorless and do not irritate the skin nor discolor silverware.

Dried Fruits

Dried apples, apricots, peaches, pears and prunes make good addition to the winter larder. They're usually low in cost and high in flavor. You can hold them in supply and use them in sauces, cereals, salads, puddings, breads, cakes and cookies to give your meals a lift.

When you buy dried fruits, look for those that are dry but pliable, uniform in size, and clean and bright. To store them put them in a tightly covered container at room temperature. In warm weather keep them in the refrigerator.

Farmers Can Help Salvage Iron and Steel

Worn-out farm machinery can help the national defense effort and may help Empire State farmers get new equipment when they need it, according to the State Agricultural Mobilization Committee. The group, headed by Robert J. Howard of Syracuse is asking farmers to market iron and steel scrap this fall.

Scrap is one of the main ingredients of steel, says the committee, and each ton can replace as much as four tons of other vital materials. Meanwhile the mills are running with a dangerously short supply of scrap on hand. An adequate supply of the vital metal would help insure enough steel for the farm equipment industry, the committee points out. The scrap can be sold through usual dealer channels.

Don't sell machinery for scrap, however, if it can be put back in shape, the committee warns. Repairing machinery that can be repaired will cut down on the demand for new metal equipment.

County agents, P. M. A. committeemen, and other members of county Agricultural Mobilization Committees will have information about local scrap dealers, as well as other facts about local scrap drives.
