

THE GREAT LAKES FILLING.

Natural Causes which Threaten their Existence as Inland Seas.

Serious complaints are being made by Montreal shippers that their boats are delayed in transit through the canals owing to the lowness of the water, and that this lowness is owing to the falling of the level of the lakes. It is said that the water level in the lakes has sunk gradually for many years, and that it has now reached a level when the Government must do something to remedy it or undertake such works as shall secure a constant and steady supply of water in the canals. The changes in the lower lakes were first noticed in 1888. Since then a great change has been observed, the draught of water steadily, though slowly, decreasing. Prof. Selwyn, of Ottawa, being interviewed, said:

"There is no doubt that the lakes are filling up, very gradually perhaps, and it may be millions of years before any serious change may take place in the larger lakes, but in the shallowest, Lake Erie, which is only 120 feet average depth, the effect might be much more serious at an earlier date. The reason of the lake filling up is quite obvious. When first I went up into the West in 1873, I found that the process of filling up had commenced, and in my report I drew the attention of the Government to the fact. In my interviews with the Indians I found that their legendary lore contained traces of their knowledge of the fact that the lakes were filling up, and not only so, but I found, going back into their legends to time immemorial, that some time or other, perhaps many generations ago, some of our great valleys were lakes, which have been filled up. In this legendary story I have every reason to believe, as my own geological researches tend to confirm it, and in my own personal experience I have known many large water holes completely filled up."

"On my son's farm in the West there was a pond, with a stream running through it, of several acres, which, in 1881, was some 3 feet deep, and off which he took a magnificent crop of hay. This filling in is increasing rapidly, and while much more rapid now than in former years, will continue to increase more rapidly yet. You ask the season of this. It is self-evident that while the mass of the territory drained by the myriad streams of the West, all running into these ponds and lakes, was thickly wooded, the trees not only served to hold the water, but to prevent the washing away of the soil by means of their numerous roots. As the country becomes cleared, so these safeguards are removed, and after heavy rains the waters pour down unchecked of these lands, and percolating through them as well as running over them, carry with the streams immense and ever-increasing volumes of silt or soil. As long as this is borne along by the velocity of the streams it has no time to settle, but when the rivers fall into the deep still lakes, the law of gravitation makes the silt sink to the bottom and gather there. The same thing has been seen in many parts of Europe, where rapid and impetuous streams run into the sea, and thus come the curious natural phenomena which are now affecting our own lakes. When you take the thousands of miles of watershed drained by countless streams, all coming into the great lakes, you can form some small idea of what the proportion of silt, increasing yearly with increased cultivation, being deposited in these lakes must be."—New York Times.

An Extraordinary Boat.

One of the most extraordinary boats on the great lakes is not a whaleback, but is a passenger car transfer operated in the Straits of Mackinac by the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic Railroad. It has an enormous capacity for carrying cars, but its peculiarities are its strength, its shape and the number of its steam engines. It carries twenty-four steam engines for the performance of the various requirements of the business it is in. The hull of the boat is as solid as the walls of an old-time blockhouse. The bow rises up and away from the water so as to hang or slant over it as if it were a hammer, and that is what it was built to be. This is because the boat is an ice-breaker, intended to keep a channel open in the straits all winter, or to make one whenever she is pushed into the massive ice that forms in that cold region. The big boat advances toward the ice, and showing her nose upon its edge, lifts herself upon it. Then a screw propeller under the overhanging bow performs the work of sucking the water from under the ice to enable the boat's weight to crush it down the more easily. Thus the destructive monster makes her way steadily through the worst ice of the semi-polar winters of that region, climbing up on the ice, crushing it down, scattering it on either side, and making no more of it than if it were so much slush.—Boston Transcript.

Mystery of a Lost Diamond.

"Nearly two years ago," says the San Francisco Bulletin, "quite a stir was made at Mills College, California, about the loss of a valuable diamond pin belonging to Miss Maud Sparks of San Reno. Servants and pupils were suspected and much notoriety was given to the case in the papers. Miss Sparks was removed from the school in consequence of the supposed theft. Lately, when one of her old gowns was being ripped, the pin was found in the drapery of the garment, where it had been safely concealed all the time."
