The keynote and sounteries of life in the cities of the Northwest is the word hustle." We have enable it in the East, but we use it humoreusly, just as we once used the Southern word "skewe once used the southern word was a time leadings. One day, as I sat in the lobby of one of the great hotels in the older pair of twin cities, I heard two old stands greeting one another with srdent expressions of ritendship and delight. They had not met for a long while, and each asked about the other's Lizzie and Fannie and their respective. Lizzie and Faunie and their respective little ones. All of a sudden I heard one other inquired, plainly disappointed that the pleasant interview was not to be prolonged.

"Where?" the other echoed. "Why, to hustle, of courae. I have lost ten minutes standing here talking to you. I'm going out to hustle."

The word always jars upon the ear of an Eastern man when it is seriously spoken, but it is preferable to that other expression once dominant in the West, but now all but abandoned. That was the word "rustle." The noun a "rustler" and the verb "to rustle" meant precisely what is conveyed by the newer terms a hustler and to hustle. At the first blush, as they say out West, rustle seems the better word. There is a hint of poetry in the suggestion of the sound of moving leaves upon the ground or of the silken dress of a lady moving rapidly. Moreover, that was what the word was intended to convey, the idea being that of a man who moves so rapidly that of a man who moves so rapidly that the dead leaves upon the earth rustled as he swept along. But in its origin it is a word of evil intent, for the cowboys invented it and applied it to cattle-thieves, rustlers being the swift raiders who stoke upon the grazing cattle on the plains and rustled off with as many head, or beasts, as they could get away with. Therefore rustle is the worse word of the plains and rustled off with as many nead, or beasts, as they could get away with. Therefore rustle is the worse word of the two. But to one who lives where neither word is in familiar use there is little choice, since the actual meaning of hustle is not far different from that of jostle. tie is not far different from that of jostle. Both imply a serious and even brutal lack of consideration for other persons, who are elbowed and pushed out of the way by the hastler as rowdies are huge led along by the police.—[Harper's Magazine Magazine.

Recluses in Australia's Mines.

In parts of Australia one comes across a characteristic class in the shape of old miners who haunt the deserted diggius, the banks of gravelly-bottomed ams which hold some traces of the streams which hold some traces of the shining treasure in their beds—relics of the old days of the mining craze, ancient hulks stranded where the reflux of the great wave of excitement and speculation has left them. One comes across their huts now and then in the thick scrub their huts now and then in the thick scrub along the water course, and finds in each a bronzed and bearded he mit who greets the visitor with a quiet "Good-day, friend," as he looks at him with lustreless eyes. The old fire of expectation and hope has gone out of these orbs; they show nothing but the settled and patient acceptance of disappointed hopes, which in the case of many weaker men, has caused madness or self-distruction.

The men who have experienced these vicissitudes are not, as a rule, drawn into companionship therea rule, drawn into companionship there-by; they prefer to live alone, nor from week's end to week's end do they see or desire the presence of any other human being. Lost in the remote wilds of the uesire the presence or any other numan being. Lost in the remote wilds of the bush, they have acquired something of the shyness and love of solitude which characterizes the furred and feathered creatures about them—as silent as the yongless birds, living lives as destitute of fragrance as the scentless flowers.

A Bootblack's Odd Sign.

The United States once claimed the "Learned Blacksmith," but it has remained for Liverpool, England, to come forward in these letter days with a "Learned Shoeblack," who displays the following as a sign as well as a proof of his eradition:

"Pedal teguments artistically illumi-nated in ebon hues and lubricated in a nated in ebon hues and lubricated in a workmanlike manner for the infinitesimal remuneration of two pence. Antiquated teguments (pedal or superpedal) expurgated judiciously and resuscitated with exceeding expedition for a nominal compensation. se Falls in the Sys of Some rare and unaccountable freak

Some rare and unaccountable reak of rature has made a natural wonder of an unassuming white horse at Spokane Falls, Wash, says the St. Louis Republic. The wonder is not the horse himself, but in a picture which covers the front part of the left eye of the animal. Anyone who has ever had the pleasure of a visit Spokane will requester the falls Spokane will remember the falls which give the city its other name; spokane will remember the lans which give the city its other name; that is, the name of Spokane Falls. The picture in the horse's eye is a perfect minature of the falls, island, mill, and all. The animal's optic-has then examined by hundreds of persons, including photographers, scientists opticians etc. and the minia tists, opticians, etc., and the minia-ture in the eye has been carefully compared with photographs and en-gravings of the falls, and all have con-curred in pronouncing it a wonder of curred in production to wonders and a nost remarkably correct picture. The owner of this wonderful creature, a Mr. Deakin, has been offered all the way from $5,000 to $10,000 for his curiosity, but so far he $10,000 for his curiosity, but so far he bas refused all offers, seeming to prefer being pestered to death by sight-seers, who come by the thousands to view the uncanny picture and ask questions. A traveler, C. A. Dillman, who took a peep at the "Wonder of the Rockies" last summer, has the following to say in regard to the the following to say in regard to the horse and the picture: "Mr. Deakin sent the horse around to the hotel where I stopped, in order that I might where I stopped, in order that I might see him. 'I me animal is white in color and of medium size. I was somewhat skeptical about the story of the picture until I had looked into the horse's lelt eye. Judge of my astonishment when I saw therein depicted a perfect reproduction of the falls of the Spokane River, as true to life as any photograph. The part of the falls shown is from the waterworks across to the mills. The island upon which the water-works building works across to the mills. The island upon which the water-works building stands is also shown. The picture is absolutely perfect in every detail. The horse is one of a number bought in by horse-dealers, and has been the property of the present owner (who, by the way, was the discoverer of the picture) but a short while."

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced is a local disease, and prescribed curs with local treatment, pronounced it 'acurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J.
