An agenious Robbers' Dis.

A most extraordinary discovery has recently been made by the police on the Boulevard Ornano, Paris. Two policemen on night duty followed several suspicious-looking individuals who were carrying large parcels and were astonished to see them disarwho were carrying large parcels and were astonished to see them disappear, as if by magic, into the glacis of the fortification. They went up to the spot and saw a ray of light coming up through a crack and heard sounds of laughter.

One of them went off at once for celnforcements, and as soon as other officers had arrived they raised a neavy trap-door and went down a staircase cut into the earth into a arge chamber, thickly carpeted, where five men and three women were carousing. The gay company were captured and taken before the commissary of police, who soon learned that they were professional thieves and that they had lived quietly for six months in the cave which they had dug in the fortification. An immense quantity of stolen An immense quantity of stolen property was found.

Women and Marriage.

To most women marriage is a haven To most women marriage is a naven of rest where they will be free from worry and care. But there are two cares in matrimony where there is one in the single life. If the wife accepts these gracefully, she is a stimulus to her busband; if she complains and worries, the husband is generally worries, the husband is generally what his wife-makes him, and there nothing that so unfits a man for his business life as a discontented wife at home. Wives should bear this in mind. It costs little to be cheerful, and the gains to be received are far in excess of the actual outlay.
