The victory of disinfectants and the discovery of the germ disinfectants are considered the great triumphs of modern medicine. They have made hygiene and sanitary measures to protect health possible, and they open up new avenues for combating disease.

But the great point—that is worthy of understanding is that the antiseptic is based upon salt, primarily. Salt in some of its forms is then the great disinfectant which nature supplies. We find it nearly everywhere, and its value as a health preservative is just being realized. We use salt on our meat to flavor it, but really to make it more acceptable to the stomach, where the meat undergoes a remarkable change. Salt on it prevents souring, and the sudden development in us of disease germs. Similarly salt in all our food acts as a purifier. Horses and cows never do well unless salt is fed to them occasionally. Their systems become run down and sickly if it is denied to them.

But salt as a purifier of the earth can be carried further than simply as an ingredient of our food to make it more acceptable. It is a medicine, a mineral possessing medicinal properties of high order. The mineral waters are generally highly impregnated with salt, and many of them owe their beneficial results almost entirely to this. In hot weather salt drinks are valuable in keeping off diseases. Salt baths introduce the salt into the system through the pores of the skin. In fact, those who take salt baths in winter and summer are freer from disease than those who dose themselves with drugs. Salt until it becomes nauseating to the taste should be taken internally and externally in the shape of baths the year round. During the fall and spring, when the weather is changing, it is especially beneficial. —[Yankee Blade.

The Ant-Bear.
 An effort is to be made in Cape Colony, South Africa, to prevent the threatened extermination of that curious but useful quadruped, the aardvark, or ant-bear, which is one of the very best friends of the white colonists, although they have only lately been induced to believe it. Its food is the white ant, which does enormous mischief to the crops. Against these pests the bear wages ceaseless warfare, digging out their nests and destroying them in countless numbers. Unfortunately, the natives are especially fond of ant-bear meat, which resembles a very good quality of pork, and also hunt it for its hide, which is worth about $4 in the market. Time, however, is already beginning to work out the aardvark's revenge. The white ant is increasing with ominous rapidity, and the farmers' associations are in a state of considerable alarm. They are demanding protection for the ant-bear, and that harmless creature may yet survive to enjoy a season of great prosperity and peace.

"The Mule Blowed Fust."
 Babe Boston's mule was sick and a neighbor advised him to administer calomel.
 "How will I get it into him?" asked Babe.
 "Put it in a quill, put the quill in his mouth and blow it down his throat," responded the neighbor.
 A few days later the neighbor met him. Babe was as thin as a rail; he looked right green and was all doubled up.
 "What's the matter with you?" asked the neighbor.
 Babe placed his hand pathetically over his stomach, gave a sigh like a blacksmith's bellows with a hole in it and replied:
 "The mule blowed fust."

Milk as a Dressing for Wounds.
 Milk has been found to contain remarkable healing qualities if applied to wounds in an early stage, and excellent results have been obtained by the use in the dressing of burns. Compresses are soaked in milk and laid on the burn, to be renewed night and morning. An extensive burn has in this way been reduced in three days to one-quarter of its original size. Another burn, which had been treated for eight days with olive oil and oxide of zinc, healed rapidly under a milk dressing. —[Detroit Free Press.

Did you ever see a sickly baby with dimples? or a healthy one without them?
 A thin baby is always delicate. Nobody worries about a plump one.
 If you can get your baby plump, he is almost sure to be well. If you can get him well, he is almost sure to be plump.
 The way to do both—there is but one way—is by CAREFUL LIVING. Sometimes this depends on Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil.
 We will send you a book on it; free.
