WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17, 1895.

"The wave of women's editions of newspapers seems to have passed," notes the New York Times. "Many of them were very creditable, but they were hardly needed to demonstrate that women's work is acceptable in newspaper offices."

The encalyptus tree, which is being planted extensively in California for windbreaks and other purposes, grows to a height of fifty feet in three years after the seed is planted. When raised for cordwood and cut once every fifth year it brings about $50 an acre.

It is said that the savage tribes of the Soudan have it in their power to ruin Egypt by damming the waters of the Nile, or the Italians by using its upper waters for irrigating. To keep Egypt in good taxpaying condition, the British must control the upper Nile.

The king of Denmark sent a telegram to President Faure of France, congratulating him on his election, and recalling a "delightful evening" at the Royal Theatre at Copenhagen, where he had seen Faure play "Faust." It was not till some time afterwards that he learned that M. Felix Faure, the operatic star, and the President of France were two persons.

The death of General Sang Ching, at the age of seventy by a fall from his horse in Manchuria, robs China of another of her ablest commanders. What with beheadings, suicides and accidents and desertions by foreigners remains the New York Mail and Express, China's army and navy have few men left who are worthy anything. Her condition in this war has been lamentable, mentally and physically.

A London mathematician estimates that the whole population of the world could be packed in a box measuring only 1,140 yards in width, 1,140 yards in depth and 1,140 yards in height. Each person he says could be allowed twenty-seven cubic feet of room in such a box and the box itself could be deposited when full in any of the London parks, with ample room to spare, and a cyclist could run around it in six minutes, the distance being two and a half miles. "This goes to show," muses the Atlanta Constitution, "how small a part of the earth's surface, after all, is required to furnish standing room for its inhabitants."

The fanciful nomenclature of the restaurant waiter has often been the subject of comment and many columns of copy, touching on the same, have passed the compositor's hands. The trade of the forist is not without its jargon. The World gives the following as being in use in New York: Chrysanthemums, "mums"; tuberoses, "tubes"; lilies of the valley, "valleys"; Jacqueminot roses, "jacks"; "bride roses," "brides"; primroses, "prims"; marla Louise violets, "Louises"; golden-rod, "rods"; stephanotis, "steps"; Cape jasmin, "capes"; japonicas, "japs"; amaryllis, "amits"; China asters, "chias"; morning glories, "glories"; lemon verbena, "lemons"; narcissus, "cissus"; Rhododendrons, "den-drons"; immortelles, "everlastings."

The great ordinance survey map of England, containing over 108,000 sheets, and costing during the last twenty years about $1,000,000 a year, is nearly completed. The scales vary from ten to five feet to the mile for the towns, through twenty-five inches, six inches, one inch, and .1 inch to the mile. The details are so minute that "the twenty-five and six inch maps show every hedge, fence, ditch, wall, building, and even every isolated tree in the country. The twenty-five inch map shows in color the material of which every part of a building is constructed. The plans show not only the exact shape of every building, but every porch, area, doorstep, lamp-post, railway and sleeping."

AGAINST THE YANKEE

Spanish Feeling in Cuba Running High.

Officials Putting Themselves Out of Their Way To Make It Inconvenient for Americans—The Virginius Case Constantly Thrown Into Their Teeth as an Incident of Cowardice.

Tampa, Fla., April 15.—A letter received from Santiago de Cuba says that Spanish feeling against the "Yankee" residents of Cuba is running high since the Alliance was fired upon off Cape Maysi. In Santiago and nearby villages and towns where the newly-arrived government troops have been quartered army sub-lieutenants and lieutenants, and even members of the so-called home guards, seem to make it their business to cause resident or visiting Americans as much inconvenience as possible.

Indignities to Americans. One is compelled to show his passport in some cases half a dozen times a day, and is asked all kinds of impudent questions. If you are not sufficiently fluent in the Spanish language to explain everything to the satisfaction of these officials they draw their swords and march you off to jail as a suspect.

Stars and Stripes Forbidden. An American merchant doing business in one of these suburban villages, a station on the railway leading into the interior, lately put a flag pole on his building, intending to raise the stars and stripes should the occasion require, but was warned by a Spanish army officer not to do so, and accused of sympathy with the revolution. While in conversation, the Virginius case is almost every day thrown into the teeth of Americans as an incident of the Yankee government's cowardice, and as proof that Spain will never submit to Secretary Gresham's demand in the Alliance case.

The uprising in Puerto Principe is general and will seriously affect results. Maceo is on the island hastening to the front with 11,000 men.

Several years later Mrs. McNeil was awarded a divorce for desertion and $10,000 alimony, but, unknown to her, McNeil had obtained a divorce in the superior court here on the ground of cruelty. Since then he has accumulated a fortune estimated at $100,000. This fortune Mrs. McNeil now desires to share.

The population of New York, according to these figures is 1,888,780, an increase since the census of the state board of health, taken in 1893, of just 87,041. The net debt of the society on April 1, 1894, was $7,887.60. The present debt, as the books close, is $132,140.15. During the year just closed, therefore, it has added to its debt $44,152.58.

SPRING FRESHETS.

The Connecticut River Twelve Feet Above Low Water Mark. Hanover, N. H., April 15.—For forty-two hours rain has fallen here steadily. Every stream has overflowed its banks and is bringing down ice, logs and debris, and submerging fields and meadows seldom touched by spring and flood. Highways are badly washed and in places they are several feet under water. The Connecticut river is twelve feet higher than its natural level, and is raising about one foot per hour. Boat works hitherto untouched by freshets are in danger. Barre, Vt., April 15.—For the past thirty-six hours it has been raining steadily. The river had lowered much from Tuesday's freshet, but early this morning it began to overflow its banks.

Her prow was lifted up by the rocky, shelving shore and was driven through the sea wall which surrounds the island, a distance of twenty feet. There was some excitement among the passengers at first, but all hands were soon taken off by a tug and forwarded to New Haven by rail. It will be a difficult task to float the steamer.

TWO MORE CAPTURED

O'Donnell and McGuire Back in the Asylum.

Found at Pine Plains in a Hay Car—After One Shot O'Donnell Surrendered, But McGuire Tried To Escape to the Woods—Say Perry Struck Out for Himself.

Matteawan, N. Y., April 15.—O'Donnell and McGuire, two of the five convicts who escaped from the hospital here on Wednesday night, were captured at Pine Plains yesterday by James Coyle, a hospital attendant. Coyle saw O'Donnell looking out the door of a hay car, and fired a shot into the side of the car. O'Donnell then came out and gave himself up. McGuire, however, jumped from the other side of the car and ran. O'Donnell was delivered into the custody of the station agent, and Coyle then started in pursuit of McGuire, who endeavored to get under cover in the woods. When captured McGuire refused to walk, but, finding that he could not escape, he finally came along willingly.

Still in Asylum Uniform.

Both men were returned to the hospital, Coyle, in the meanwhile, having been joined by two other attendants who had been searching the neighborhood. The convicts had walked the track continually since leaving the hospital. They still had on the asylum uniform, except the coats, and, in addition, had in their possession a ragged coat and hat which they had secured somewhere along the track. They had entered no house and had had but little to eat.

McGuire made a statement, agreeing substantially with Quigley's, regarding the manner of the escape, except that he stated that the keys were partly made by another patient, who had been working in the isolation building before it was occupied, being engaged with attendants and others in finishing the floors.

Know Nothing as to Perry's Plans.

A broken end of a file and about two inches of a watch spring were found in one of the pockets of McGuire's pantaloons. The file, he said, had been secreted in the isolation building, while work was going on there, and the piece of watch spring had been obtained from the wreck of a watchman's box, which had been demolished some months before in the ward. The prisoners claim to know nothing as to the plans of Perry. They say he struck out alone after jumping from the roof.

BELIEVE IT WAS PERRY.

Y., April 15.—The capture of Michael O'Donnell and Patrick McGuire yesterday morning has caused no little consternation in this vicinity. One of the perpetrators led behind a pair of socks, which were identified as Perry's, and two pine strips which he had used as wooden shoes. The socks were all worn out on the bottoms and discarded for a good pair which he had stolen. This is not the only clue to Perry's whereabouts, as it is almost certain that he was in this city Saturday night.

Tallies with Perry's Description.

About 7:30 o'clock Saturday night a stranger, unannounced, walked into the kitchen of Orlando Buger, on North Hamilton street, near the Philadelphia, Reading & New England railroad tracks, where Mr. Buger and his three children were sitting reading. The stranger asked for something to eat, and it was given to him. He held a large dark colored sombrero behind his back, and Mr. Buger thinks, he also had a club in his hand. The description given by Mr. Buger tallies exactly with that of Perry. The stranger asked the way to the bridge road, and, when told, walked out. The police made a search, but no clue could be found.

I will not believe that if our people are afforded an intelligent opportunity for some second thought they will sanction a scheme that, however couched, means disaster, confusion, nor that they will sanction a scheme that, however couched, means undermining the foundation of a safe currency, to endanger the beneficent character purposes of their government."

Bauchamp's Do

THE PRIMA DONNA

A Story of Mystery, Love and Devotion.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER I

THE SECOND LETTER

MISS BAUCHAMPE—Last the copy will say as to needless apprehensions will say at the outset that this is for the purpose of allaying apprehensions.

You will be surprised to receive a letter from this city, but your surprise will be exceeded by the surprise and annoyance experienced upon receiving our letter here without moment's delay. Our business we are expected to justify here within five minutes' notice, as on my way to your lodgings was met by the messenger who orders to me which brought me this.

This will fully explain the rather satisfactory telegram you received from the train. My business is so detailed me three or four days ago to say what must sound very odd as so weak, unless there is a deep behind them. All I can say is that I am convinced all your satisfaction is explained, and that your brother and you will soon be together—and that you will look back on this time with a smile at your feverish anxiety.

I desire to caution you against a false, or rather, a very uncertain opinion of interviewers. I refer to men employed upon the press who will pry into people's mouths that you never uttered. It will be best for you to get your details me three or four days ago to say what must sound very odd as so weak, unless there is a deep behind them. All I can say is that I am convinced all your satisfaction is explained, and that your brother and you will soon be together—and that you will look back on this time with a smile at your feverish anxiety.

I believe the estimate of his life to have excited Dabney's friends to frenzy. If you should be in a great strait, from any cause whatever requiring services of one like me, or whom you trust implicitly, address a note to J. Simmonds, 1102 East Eighteenth street. Mr. Simmonds is, in my confidence, a true friend and a wise and experienced counsellor.

Once more—do not despond. Your law friends, Miss Bauchampe, who resolved to seek and restore your brother. If money, or ingenuity, or the experience of the police avail, he will be speedily. Your friend,

ARTHUR LIVINGSTON. P.S. You will understand I refer to such aid as a man only could render, assuming that you will repose confidence in a Victoria, whose interest in you is great. Rely upon her as you would upon me.

CHAPTER XI

BEHIND THE BARS.

These letters were posted by Livingston about ten in the evening, after he had done a hard day's work. He had lunched lightly at noon. No dinner man craved food, and he posted letters with his own hand, and he posted so much was off his mind, turned to a restaurant.

Was it fancy? Did his senses play him a little distance? The gas-light shone full in his face. Livingston walked toward him. The man suddenly stepped into an open door near at hand. Livingston hastened into the house—a saloon. There was no one in sight but the barkeeper. Livingston ordered a glass of wine. As the barkeeper handed him the bottle, Livingston said, carelessly: "Which way did my friend go? He came in just now."

The barkeeper shook his head but did not speak. "He wants to see me as much as I want to see him. Tell him that Livingston is here." Livingston, from New York—

The barkeeper pursed his lips. "We mind our own business here. What kind of question do you want to do anybody here?"

"My friend came in just now," said Livingston, adding, carelessly, "No matter. I give you credit for minding your business. At the same time, there is a fellow; my name is on the card. If I find you to hand it to the gentleman who entered, I will be obliged to you."

He walked out slowly, feeling half dead, and stood at the bar for fully fifteen minutes, but Livingston did not emerge from the saloon.

That Livingston stepped aboard a cable road to his hotel. He would not have been in the police headquarters and press until one in the morning. In the meantime he would rest. As he was in the act of entering his hotel, loud voices in the hot altercation at the bar, under the influence of liquor, was raising a group with his wife's of 6000. A man in citizen's attire approached the barkeeper and addressed him. The barkeeper took up and down the street suddenly, and walked away quickly. Livingston looked after him.

In citizen's attire followed the barkeeper. Livingston was a little distance in the rear of this man. The barkeeper stepped into a saloon. Livingston could see a score or more of men in the saloon.
