Fall and Winter Underwear.

The most tender-skinned man, as well as the "man robust" will find underclothing to his liking here.

Underclothing that will fit even if your legs and arms are either extraordinary long or unusually short.

Fleece lined undershirts and drawers fleeced so they won't be all knotty after the first washing, are the only kind that are on sale here.

Cotton, wool and silk fleeced, 50c to $1.00

Derby ribbed undershirts and drawers, the kind that has elasticity and will retain their shape until its last threads are worn out, 50c to $1.00.

Wool undershirts and drawers in light, medium or heavy weight, and wool that is wool, not so-called wool, $1.00 to $2.50.

Silk and worsted and all silk underwear, $2.00 to $3.50.

We are sole agents for Dr. Deimed Linen-mesh underwear.

Every man who puts it on is simply delighted. We have a little booklet that tells the whole story. It's yours for the asking.

Manhattan fancy shirts with negligee bosoms, cuffs attached or separate, as you please to wear. Patterns of the Manhattans are very exclusive, at $1.50 to $2.00. Other good brands, $1.00. Your money back for the asking if not satisfied.

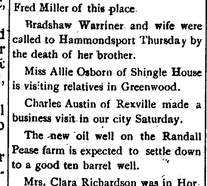
"Last winter an infant child of mine had croup in a violent form," says Elder John W. Rogers, a Christian Evangelist of Ripley, Mo. "I gave her a few doses of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and in a short time all danger was past and the child recovered." This remedy not only cures croup, but when given as soon as the first symptoms appear, will prevent the attack. It contains no opium or other harmful substance and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by L. A. Burrows, Andover, and N. E. Coston, Greenwood.

Cured of Piles After 40 Years.

Mr. C. Haney, of Geneva, Ohio, had the piles for forty years. Doctors and dollars could do him no lasting good. DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cured him permanently. Invaluable for cuts, burns, bruises, sprains, lacerations, eczema, tetter, salt rheum, and all other skin diseases. Look for the name DeWitt on the package—all others are cheap, worthless counterfeits. L. A. Burrows.

Key That Fits



"Half my patients need more iron," said "our doctor."

Iron makes rich, red blood. Yet it is very hard to give iron so it will do any good.

There are thousands of keys in the world—only one or two unlock your door. So we know of only one or two combinations of iron that seem to do the work.

By far the most generally useful prescription we know of is Vinol.

It contains the medicinal qualities of cod liver oil, iron-that-can-be-digested, and a little table wine.

It works wonders in weak women, pale children, old people, and any run-down condition. Money back if you want it.

Mail Orders Supplied at Same Prices. Express Paid.

LOWELL A. BURROWS, DRUGGIST.

GREENWOOD HILL.

If you are bilious and seeking advisers Take DeWitt's Little Early Risers Just before going to bed. You will find on the morrow, You are rid of your sorrow— That's all; just enough said.

These famous pills do not gripe, but move the bowels gently and easily, cleansing the liver. Their tonic effect gives strength to the glands, preventing a return of the disorder. L. A. Burrows.

Colds

"I had a terrible cold and could hardly breathe. I then tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and it gave me immediate relief."
W. C. Layton, Sidell, Ill.

How will your cough be tonight? Worse, probably. For it's first a cold, then a cough, then bronchitis or pneumonia, and at last consumption. Coughs always tend downward. Stop this downward tendency by taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

Three sizes: 25c. enough for an ordinary cold; 50c. just right for bronchitis, hoarseness, hard colds, etc.; $1. most economical for chronic cases and to keep on hand.

PROFESSIONAL BRETHREN

BY GEORGE E. WALSH

waited and listened, expectantly and anxiously. The people of the house were evidently assembled in the hall below. They were too frightened to do much talking. Then matters calmed down a little, and I caught snatches of their conversation.

"The basement window was opened," somebody said. "He jumped out of that."

"Didn't you hit him, father?" asked a youthful voice which I recognized as that of the seventeen-year-old son of Mr. Jamison.

"I don't know. Do you see any signs of blood in the basement?"

They went down another flight of stairs, and I would have made a bold dash for liberty then had not the presence of some of the frightened servants in the upper hall prevented me.

Half an hour later they returned upstairs. Fortunately for me no thought of a search for another burglar entered their minds. Mr. Jamison tried to calm the servants and the ladies by saying:

"We now all go to bed again. There is no more danger. He has left the house, and we are safer than ever. A burglar never enters a house the second time."

Gradually they separated and returned to their bedrooms. Only the old man and his wife remained in the hall within my hearing. When everything was quiet again, he said:

"Ellen, I recognized the burglar tonight beyond doubt."

"Why, Edward, who was he?" his wife asked quickly.

"You will hardly believe me, Ellen, when I tell you, but it is true. I could not have been mistaken."

Then he lowered his voice and said:

"It was Charles Goddard!"

"Impossible, Edward; impossible! You were excited and could not see well!"

"No, Ellen; there was no mistake. I faced him in the hall and could have shot him dead. But the surprise at meeting him unnerved me. Then I merely tried to wound him and not to kill him when he rushed downstairs."

Their bedroom door closed then, and I heard no more. But what more did I need? I saw the game was up. My master was recognized, and nothing but family friendship could ever induce Mr. Jaimson to hold his secret.

I waited in my concealed place for several hours before daring to venture out. Then as I saw daylight beginning to break I boldly left the alcove, walked downstairs with my shoes in my hand, unfastened one of the parlor windows and dropped out upon the soft grass. I did not stop to close the window, but hurried home in time to get in my room before the servants would be rising.

CHAPTER XVIII.

TRIED to catch a few hours of sleep that morning, but I had difficulty in losing consciousness. When I did forget myself in slumber for a brief time, unpleasant dreams disturbed me, and I awoke with a start.

It was still early in the morning when I dressed and knocked at my master's door. He was sleeping soundly, and I disliked to rouse him. But I was fearful lest he had been wounded the night before, and I could not leave the house on the mission I had in view until I had ascertained. I shoved his bedroom door open and entered (he never locked it at night) and asked him if he wished anything.

"No, William; not yet," he replied in a sleepy voice. "I am very tired this morning and shall not get up until lunch time. Have a good lunch for me, and I will be ready."

His face was pale, but not more so than usual after his night visits to Dr. Squires.

"There is nothing wrong with you this morning, I hope?" I ventured to remark.

"No, William, except that I'm very weary and sleepy. Why do you ask?"

He looked inquiringly at me, and I stammered:

"Nothing, only you look pale. I thought maybe you were ill."

"No, I'm not sick—merely tired. Leave me for a few hours."

I closed the door softly, satisfied that he was unhurt.

After giving directions to the servants about an early lunch for my master I left the house and started on a brisk walk toward Mr. Jaimson's house. It was essential that I should have an interview with him before he saw my master or talked to anybody about the previous night's robbery.

He was at breakfast when I was ushered into the library. I insisted upon seeing him alone and immediately, urging the servant to report that my business was very important.

Ten minutes later he appeared in the library. He was a man past middle age, stout of figure and stern of feature. I realized that he was a man not easily turned from any course which he considered just. He bowed stiffly upon entering and said:

"I haven't the pleasure of knowing you, I believe."

I was dressed in a new suit of clothes, and I flattered myself that I could pass for a gentleman among strangers.

"No, sir, but that is not necessary," I said briskly and with the air of one of authority. "I have come to talk with you about last night's robbery."

He started visibly and then said smilingly:

"Ah, I see! You're a detective!"

I made no direct reply to this, but added:

"I think the robbers who have recently been terrorizing the neighborhood will soon be cornered."

He smiled again and said:

"Possibly. I know something about it that may lead to important results."

"I know that," I answered, "and that is why I have come thus early to see you."

"How do you know it?" he responded.

"That isn't the point. I not only know that you know a good deal about it, but I know exactly the information that leads you to think you can expose the robbers."

He looked inquisitively at me and then said frowningly:

"What is it that I know or that you think I know?"

I looked around the room as if I expected somebody might be listening.

"We are alone," he said shortly.

"You recognized the burglar last night before you shot at him," I said impressively.

He gave a startled look at me and stammered:

"Who told you—has my wife told anybody—she was the only one—"

"Never mind that," I replied, waving my hands. "I know. That is sufficient for my present purpose."

"Ah, I see! You're a detective!"

A look of suspicion entered his face, and, probably thinking that I was merely leading him on, he asked:

"If you know so much about it, please tell me who it was I recognized."

"Certainly. I'll whisper it in your ear."

I drew near to him and said impressively:

"It was Charles Goddard whom you recognized in your house last night and at whom you shot."

The last expression of doubt left his face, and he could only add slowly:

"Well, well, I don't understand how you found it out."

The man was completely mystified, as I hoped he would be, and I continued with a smile on my own face:

"Now, if you believe that I know what I'm doing we will enter into the details of my mission here this morning."

"Go on. I'm ready for anything."

"First, then, what did you intend to do with this information?"

"I hadn't made up my mind," he said doubtfully, taking a seat in an easy chair near me.

"Well, you either intended to inform the police or accuse Mr. Goddard of the crime to his own face."

"Yes, one or the other, but most likely the latter. Mr. Goddard's father and I were great friends. I should hate to see his name stained with dishonor."

"I thought as much," I replied, "and it is to prevent you from making a mistake that I have called this morning. I know more about this matter than you do."

"Probably. You seem to know all that I do. It's wonderful how you knew it, for I swear I never mentioned the matter to any one except my wife, and she's seen nobody but the servants."

"But other eyes may have recognized the man," I said suggestively.

"That's true. I never thought of that. Did some of my servants see him?"

"Don't worry yourself," I interrupted. "The person who saw him will not mention it further. I've fixed all that."

"Well, well; so early in the morning, and you seem to have arranged everything before I could decide upon the first step."

"It's my business," I added. Then continuing I said in a low voice:

"But Mr. Goddard is not the only one concerned in these robberies. There is another and I think a more dangerous neighbor who is implicated in the crimes. But he is too wary to be caught easily. He directs the whole matter, but keeps in the background. He must be caught at least and published if Mr. Goddard is to suffer. It would be a sin to let him escape and the innocent punished."

"Yes, yes; of course—by all means."

"Then we must work together. I've laid a plan by which I can prove the guilt of this other party. If you will work with me and do as I tell you, we can face him with his guilt in spite of all his skillfulness."

"Anything that you think best. Proceed, sir."

"Well, first, I want you to keep the matter strictly quiet and not mention to a living soul that you recognized the burglar last night. Let the detectives work on the case as usual, but warn your wife not to commit herself. Is she brave enough to do this?"

"Yes; Ellen is only too ready to shield Mr. Goddard. I cannot convince her that I was correct in recognizing him."

"So much the better. Let her continue to think so and pretend that you think you might have been mistaken. Then next Tuesday night I would ask you and another person who is more interested in Mr. Goddard than yourself—Miss Stetson, in short—to accompany me to one of your neighbor's houses. He will be away that night, and I will show you some of the secrets of his little game that he conceals in his house. When he returns late at night, we can confront him with the crime. I shall then leave it with you and Miss Stetson as to what course to pursue. If we arrest the man, Mr. Goddard will have to be implicated; if we punish him from the place with the threat of exposure, we can shield Mr. Goddard and give him another chance. That, in short, is my plan. Will you co-operate with me?"

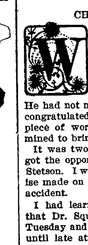
"With pleasure. It's an admirable arrangement. I believe we ought to give Charles another opportunity. I can hardly find the heart to have him arrested."

"Well, I leave that entirely to you and Miss Stetson."

"And Miss Stetson will agree with me."

I said nothing in reply, but after giving a few more directions I withdrew, promising to call for him on the evening specified to conduct him to the house of his unknown neighbor.

CHAPTER XIX.



WITH the danger of exposure of my master removed, I returned home with a lighter heart. I reached there in time to have the lunch served to him. He had not noticed my absence, and I congratulated myself upon a shrewd piece of work. I had at last determined to bring matters to a climax.

It was two days after this before I got the opportunity to call upon Miss Stetson. I wanted to redeem her promise made on the day of her horseback accident.

I had learned through an accident that Dr. Squires would be away on Tuesday and that he would not return until late at night. I did not know what his mission was or where he was going. All that concerned me was that he would be absent and the house would be left in charge of his old servant.

It was the knowledge of this that made me anxious to appoint Tuesday for the little experiment I had in mind.

When I reached the Stetson mansion, I was informed that Miss Stetson was engaged. The servants knew me by this time, and while they did not exactly treat me as one of their number they did not accord me all the courtesy due a gentleman. I was told to take a seat until the person who was with Miss Stetson had gone.

My name was not even carried up to her, but I was too much preoccupied with my thoughts to resent this incivility, and I made the most of it by taking a comfortable seat in the waiting room. This room opened right off the front parlor, and just back of that was the library.

For some time I remained seated there busily occupied with my own thoughts, but as time passed I became restless and anxious to make a change. Not hearing any voices, I rose from my seat and walked quietly into the parlor to look at some of the beautiful pictures hanging on the walls. This liberty, I knew, Miss Stetson would not resent.

As I stepped into the parlor I heard the sound of voices proceeding from the library. I would have retreated to the waiting room if the voice of Dr. Squires had not arrested my attention. I could not resist the temptation to listen to him, for, knowing what he was, I thought anything was fair enough for him, and I played the eavesdropper.

The portieres between the parlor and library were drawn, and through their thick folds I could just catch the words of the two. The first words of the doctor informed me that I had reached the place at a critical moment.

"Miss Belle, you do me injustice to say that I do not like pleasant surroundings and that I am not like other men in my tastes. No man appreciates a home more than I do."

"I did not mean to insinuate that, doctor," Miss Stetson replied. "I merely said that I thought it so strange you should like to live in that old deserted, haunted mansion."

"I do not like to live there. It was not a matter of choice with me. I was poor and had to in order to carry out my experiments."

"But couldn't you find more congenial quarters without going to any more expense?"

"No—that is, none that would suit my purpose."

There was a short pause, then the doctor continued:

UNPROFITABLE FEEDING

Intelligent stock raisers know that a certain amount of feed is necessary to keep an animal alive. They might feed that amount as long as it lives, and it would never gain a pound.

There is no profit in that kind of feeding. The kind that pays is the kind that builds flesh rapidly. If it takes twenty pounds of food each day to keep a sheep alive, twenty-five pounds a day will make it gain flesh. It's the extra five that brings the profit. The first five pounds amounts to nothing, nor does the second or third or fourth five pounds.

It's the same way with advertising. You have to do a certain amount to overcome the resistance of the public.

You have to do a certain amount of advertising to make them wake up to the fact that you are in business at all. You have to pay a certain amount to keep your advertising alive. What you pay above that amount brings profit.

Some advertisers fail because they do not use enough space. They use barely enough or sometimes not quite enough to make the advertising self sustaining. A little bit more would make it profitable. It
