THE OLD GUARD

Oh, laud the Old Guard! with brave lips applaud The brave one who climbed the Red Road with God To the Gates of the Terrible Dark, Oh, sweet are crimson dawns and lilt of lark, And woman's cheer o' days, and laugh of children, friends, And goodly labor, peace, till golden even ends. A hundred ways of pleasance, but voice cried up from sward, They heard, kept tryst with God-gallant Old Guard! They passed through Gates of Dark that light Might shine on Children of the night.

· · · · Children of liege men we stand Lords of a holy land! Fief from God's hand, sealed in men's blood: Free men are we for man's brotherhood. The fifes and drums wail an old-day tune. Bare heads! the Old Guards' marching by. Ah, soon Shall our leal men have all passed through The last picket line to the last Review They are life-weary, strife-weary, scarred: They are toil-weary, moil weary, worried Of the years' drear, and unseen loads bend backs ллаt once bore lightly heavier packs.

A tattered flag, the old-day tune, but where Are the rest who marched to the stirring air? илу, they leaped with you at the roll Of drum and bugle's blare—and the Lord of Hosts took toll Of blood. To the guns on the hill you reeled. To the countercharge you wheeled; Fought till the stars turned gray .... And some went 'youd the stars away.

When the news came back, a hand in the night Marred the widow's face with a mortal blight, Wanned the face of the girl whose lad had borne The flag up the hill on the battle morn, And stayed till the night.

A gall ping horse, a cheer-"Halloo," a father awaited for many a year, While a mother a-graying sang all 'he day long, Through an empty house, a lullaby song.

Grim was the battle, hard-bought the right; (And you buried the dead by lantern light.) Taps and lights out—oh, the bargain was hard; Taps and lignus out-laud the Old Guard!

We who walk free men on blood-cleansed soil, Are heirs of all battle and heroes toil Above us proud-shining are "Old Glory's" stars; Below sleep the warriors who made freedom our's. What has cost men's blood, men's blood shall keep; Let no craven walk where the valiant sleep. Honor for living, for the dead our plaud; For the living and dead kept tryst with God.

PEWIS BRUNDAGE is the proprietor The Lake Keuka Floral Co, at Penn Yan, N. Y. He has been in this line business for several years and has found by experience that RUSSELLOID ROOFING is the best material for the sides of greenhouses and that it will prevent the frost from working in, even in the most extreme weather.

He builds the sides of his greenhouses in a very inexpensive manner, by setting stakes around the sides, covering up to the proper height with old boards, and on the outside of this be puts 3-ply RUSSELLOID ROOFING lengthwise in strips 6 feet long, the lower edge of the RUSSELLOID underground, and the two ends together with Russellap, which makes very fine appearance, the effect being in panels. This construction, simple though it may seem, makes an absolute barrier to frost. It is far better than thick concrete walls. which he has tried in the past, and there always a heavy coating of frost inside these walls, which does not appear in the slightest degree inside Photograph? He has several large, modern greenhouses, the sides of which are made by this method, and he has just started to build another one.

Anyone who is interested can procure photograph of one of these greenhouses upon
