

to just regard for the opinion of mankind to say that so far as our participation in guaranteeing a future peace is concerned, it makes a great deal of difference in what way and upon what terms it is ended.

While the United States would have no voice in what those terms might be, the President said, it would save a voice in determining whether they should be made lasting by guarantees of universal covenant.

Elements of Peace

"No covenant of co-operative peace," said he "that does not include the peoples of the new world can suffice to keep the future safe against war, and yet there is only one sort of peace that the people of America could join in guaranteeing. The elements of that peace must be the elements that engage the confidence and satisfy the principles of the American governments; elements consistent with their political faith and with the practical convictions which the people of America have once for all embraced and undertaken to defend."

From the utterance all the President's hearers drew the conclusion that he was holding out to the old world a warning that if it would command the potent influence of the new for the future peace of all, the settlement of the war must involve concession and sacrifice, equality of rights, freedom, of the seas, and in his own words, "inviolable security of life, or worship, and of industrial and of social development to all peoples who have hitherto under the power of governments devoted to a faith and purpose hostile to their own." He specifically mentioned that the nations of all the belligerents have agreed that there should be "a united, independent and autonomous Poland," but his words were construed to apply to Alsace-Lorraine, Belgium, the Italian parts of Austria, and the mixed nationalities of the Balkans as well.

Spurious Works Attributed to Sterne

The literary pirate was not the only trouble of the eighteenth century author. There were the collectors and publishers of spurious works under his name, and Sterne suffered as heavily from these as from the pirates. The publication of the first two volumes of "Tristram Shandy" was followed as soon as it was apparent that the book was a success by a third written by a hack writer and boldly attributed to Sterne. Several other spurious works appeared in the author's lifetime and after his death his posthumous works in two volumes were being written for him, as were also three sets of his original letters.

Injurious to Sight

Looking into the fire, particularly in a coal fire, is very injurious to the eyes. Looking at molten iron will soon destroy the sight. Reading in the twilight is injurious to the eyes as they are obliged to make great exertion. Reading or sewing with a side light injures both eyes. Both eyes should be exposed to an equal degree of light. The reason is that the sympathy between the eyes is so great that if the pupil of one is dilated by being kept partially in the shade the one that is exposed cannot contract itself sufficiently for protection.

Shifting the Blame

An old tenor who had once been a great favorite was broke, down and out, and had been sleeping in a hazy stable for three months when he suddenly got a chance to sing the role in which he had once been famous. La Scala, at Milan, was packed that night. He sang—most painfully—before that vast audience. At the end the audience hissed with unanimity. "Ah," said the old tenor in the wings, "see eet not painful? Zee Italian people, sey no longer care for Verdi."

CONCERNING SUFFRAGE

Six times the legality of the woman suffrage law in Illinois has been attacked and six times it has emerged legal proof against its enemies. It is therefore to be as a model law and introduced by the suffragists into every state legislature in session this winter.

The introduction of the Illinois Presidential Woman Suffrage bill into the state legislatures will prove a test of the good faith with which the woman suffrage planks were written in the various party platforms. Legislators have the power to grant presidential suffrage to women. Legislatures are controlled by political parties. It is therefore up to the parties to make good the words written in favor of votes for women.

"For the first time in the history of this country," says the Suffragist, "a woman has been granted the privilege of the floor of the Senate." Jessie L. Simpson, appointed by Senator Stone secretary of the Foreign Relations Committee has won on her merits a position held sacred for men and with it the right to tread on a floor where high heels have been up to now taboo.

In connection with the transfer of some property in London a will was put in evidence which showed that Mr. Carnegie was not only the first Andrew to found a public library but that libraries were not in early days considered suitable places for women.

This will was drawn by Andrew Bowman about 1750 and it expressly stipulated in providing for the public use of his library that women and dogs were to be rigorously excluded. Presumably the ants of his day were as hostile to the woman librarian as they are now to the woman voter.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle has ordered all hats off to the women of Britain. It is an old slogan and would not be mentioned in a suffrage column, if he had not gone further and declared that not even a militant should ever again keep him from voting for woman suffrage.

"I not only would vote for presidential suffrage for women if I were in the legislature but I would get out and work for it," said Secretary of War Baker in a Cleveland interview with some Ohio solons who had come to ask his advice as to their attitude toward the presidential suffrage bill in the Ohio Legislature.

In an interview in the New York Tribune the Superintendent of the New York State Anti-Saloon League is reported as saying that "some of the politicians and some of the liquor men desired to get prohibition on the ticket this fall with the woman suffrage amendment, in the hope that they could play one against the other and defeat them both."

Andalusian girls are so singularly graceful, with sea hands and feet. Their complexion are pale with the exception of those who live by the sea or in mountain places, such as Ronda, where the women have always been noted for their beauty. Some say the Spanish skin is the most perfect in Europe, and Gautier describes it as "a golden pallor," but unfortunately the Andalusian girl is very anxious to hide its fine texture under a coating of powder. Weather seems to have little effect on it, for it neither freckles nor discolours.
