The layman's mind will at once connect up these suggestions with the weather service. Most of us have studied the charts israid by the Government, with a vague understanding as to why forty below at medicine Hat means that we must look up furs, raincoats, or other garments.

In the face of these easily understandable conditions, the illustration of Admiral Peary with reference to the great blizzard of 1888 is illuminating. At: that time scientists of the United States found certain kinds of Diatoms (microscopic forms) in the snow fall of that blizzard. Pare or four years later Admiral Peary returned from Greenland with microscopic material from the great Inland lee Cap of Greenland which microscopic examination showed to contain the same species of Diatoms, as the blessard of several years previous. Scientists immediately recognized that old Boreas, in his operations as Greenland, had stirred up this sterm which later came down to disturb the peace of mind of more vilized areas of the universe. The natural conditions revealed

Off the coast of Maine. Rear Admiral Peary and his family find their real joys of life in their island home. There are few social functions there; no midnight banquets or noisy neighbors to peck over the back fence, or to make it necessary for the great explorer to endure his one greatest er to endure his one greatest punishment—that of wearing a starched collar.

"When we get up in the morning, we dress for all day, and the ing, we dress for all day, and the breakfast costume answers for dinner." remarked the hero of the north. As he looked about him and my vision followed the direction of his gaze, my, impression was that his eyes did not see the luxurious furniture and embellishments of the fashionable club where we had met. If at the moment I was reading my subject correctly, he was thinking of his correctly, he was thinking of his island home, and the family, and the brave woman whom he had endearingly addressed as "Jo!" in that brief note written at the North Pole-

For years the Grange has been the "For yours the Grange has been the farmers' only political agent," said the speaker, who herself is a daugater of a Delaware County farmer, "and now 1 can see how the Grange cas greatly strengthen itself politically at the present crisis. The farmer is going to win this fight for better market conditions, but we must win not with sons sent to the Trout, but with wive and daughters sent to the polls. We are going to win a great political victory by the entrauchisement of women in New York State.

"The women of the cities will not stand solution for the cities will not stand solution for farming interests, but stand solidly for farming interests, bu a very large group of city housewires can be brought to see these issues as we see them. The city housewife wants fresh food from the farm, and this constant damped and being hot before her this constant demand will bring be into the content on the farmer's side. If the Grange presents its side of the question. With this group of clib obusewives as voters on the farmer's side we should also count mon the women of the farm as voting partners' that is how the Grange can greatly strengthen itself politically in the pre-ent crisis."
