

JUNE 9, 1917

44 YEARS AGO TODAY

The British Man-of-War, the "Gaspe", Was Burned in Narragansett Bay by a Party of Americans from Providence.

The pride of England suffered greatly from her several sea defeats administered at the hands of the young country in the New World. Proud of her navy, Great Britain felt almost secure from the small fleets of many other countries. A grim determination to win made America's victory possible. Did you display half this purpose in connection with your personal affairs and savings there would be no cause for worry regarding the future.
