

Every prospector, who has far and the yellow flags have gone down—somewhere in Alaska. And when the bottom is struck, the bed rock or floor thru which to 18 hours in thawing the two the gold cannot penetrate, then more shafts, cutting the needs in a short time the hopes of easy wood and hauling out the weeks are fulfilled or blasted. There on the bed rock may be dirt with a windlass and bucket. The bucket tapers wide at the seams from which a pan of dirt top so it can be easily dumped. As the hog goes down, they may be as free from any flakes pan and estimate, and one of as is John D. Rockefeller's head these old "sour doughs" can in a few minutes' mental calculation. It is a great, fascinating game determine just how rich the bla. ground is to the running foot, a problem that would take consid- erable figuring for a man fresh with the figures.

The big guess is, as the shaft deepens, whether the condition of the bed rock is such that it has stopped the descent of the gold, or whether it is smooth and hard may be just average, where good wages may be made by staying with the streak. The horizontal shafts are thawed in the same way, by building fires and thawing ahead. When the bed rock is near enough to the surface open cuts are made in place of the under- ground tunnels, and this is far easier.

If a strike is made, about the first thing that is done is to beat it for the nearest river town and spread the news. Usually a life that the minute a prospector makes a strike he jumps to civilization and proclaims it. He wants company, a camp, the excitement of a stampede and above all a store where he can buy low close friends are tipped off before the stampede is started. Men who have worked for years in the solitude of prospecting simply go in his life, and when a strike is left, claims a man not look at or count enough assessment work hold for speculation, the foot may, and is liable to the richest dirt in the camp.

All rules of the mining game are off in Alaska gold mining. Everything is chance. "Where you find it," I saw a strike made by a "fool chukko" thawing two feet farther in an abandoned hole.

Next week I am going to tell you more about mining life—ing to give you the "inside stuff" not often written of the expeditions, the trail and the hardships that go with the hunt for gold in the North.

And a late comer, perhaps, a "cheechako" (tenderfoot) who never panned an ounce of gold
