The efforts of Chairman Chamberlain of the Senate and his co-terminors, may be inspired by a desire to help win the war, but it is helping on the wrong side of the battle line.

It must be encouraging to the House to read the speeches of Chamberlain accusing the President and our army of inefficiency and if it would be the natural conclusion of our enemies that they have nothing to fear from our military forces. His speeches before the Senate will lead the enemy to believe that this nation is a house divided against itself and ready to fall and are in effect giving aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States.

What is this new business of saving pennies to buy the Kaiser? It is not only easy to spend, but it makes us feel good. A good fellow is always a true spender in an economic sense. He is not stingy. He is not a miser. He is a man who has a free opinion on a light read—a term of other's contempt.

Now, if you were merely to ask us to save our pennies, to be economical, to be frugal, to be care free; if you appealed to our sense of better conduct, we should feel obliged to heed the appeal on patriotic grounds, of course. But there would be very little to be gained from such practice of virtue. Our life long habit as a people has been to spend today and let the future take care of itself, and along with this habit we have acquired a sense of royal prodigality in our lavish expenditure. We father despise the pious penny frugality of other nations and enjoy the large sense of importance which our free spending gives us. Therefore in order to get us to change our habits you must find us some reason, and you must give us some method of saving that will have at least half as much interest in it as continual spending.

The spending spirit has in it a good deal of the gambling spirit. Now, here comes Uncle Sam with the catch-penny cards, that are almost as much fun as the punch board and the poker hand machine in the back corner of the cigar store, where, if the law is not looking, you can drop a dime or a quarter on the chance of getting smokes enough to last you all day or all week—or nothing at all. The pleasure of gaining, however, is one of those amenities of life which virtuous governments insist on taking away from us. It isn't permitted to gamble in public. You mustn't throw your pennies away so foolishly. Very well, my pious friends. How can I throw them away? Why, you can throw them into "saving stamps!" Whenever you have a quarter that you would like to "blow" you can blow it in at the nearest post office station or bank and get a stamp. Then you can stick this stamp on your card and bet with yourself how long it will take you to get 16 stamps—a card full. It beats saving cigarette coupons all to pieces. It's a little game to queer the Kaiser.

I have never saved anything in my life. I posture saving. I even despise it, like a good American. I can't be bothered thinking about a rainy day. When I get through spending the Lord must provide. Of course I bought a Liberty bond. I had to. That was just spending too. I didn't want to be the only mean man in town. But that wasn't saving. It was just another exciting extravagance. When I bought my bond I made my money goodby. I never expect to see it again. How should I? I never heard of keeping money overnight.

But this is quite a new stunt. This stamp card saving system. It looks to me as if it would be amusing. I'm going to try it out.

That is how I feel about it. But aside from the pleasant novelty of the sensation of saving I know (in moments of sobriety) that this attempt of the government to get us to save as cheerfully as we spend is a good thing. We might have seen years ago that we should not always have a content to throw away. I know that, while ordinary frugality is a peasant virtue, self-restraint is a patriotic quality of the highest order. Wastefulness is not only foolish; it is essentially vulgar. Old and ripe civilities have always learned this. They know that nothing is in worse taste than extravagance and display.

The reckless and extravagant spending in New York two seasons ago, under a sudden influx of wealth, was only the vulgarly of the mining camp over again. The extravagance and wasteful spending of all modern societies before the war was a sign of recklessness of spirit and a general weakening of morale in all nations.

To acquire the habit of frugality, as the French have it, as the Japanese have it, as all the deep, wise old nations have it, is to show that we have acquired wisdom, refinement, moderation and good taste in the art of life. To live in that restraint is to live in that common sense, in that decency, in that regard for others and in that consideration for the future of our own independence. To live with frugality means to live with a due sense of the relative values of things. It means that we have come to perceive that life is more than food and the body than raiment; it means spiritual strength and poise.

In the present crisis it means the preservation of all liberty and civilization for ourselves and the whole world.

THE MOST EFFICIENT WAY TO LICK THE KAISER IS TO LICK AS MANY W.S.S. AS POSSIBLE.

A party of thirteen Red Cross workers of Andover enjoyed these excellent wheatless biscuits.

First, the cornmeal—one-half cup is put in a shallow pan placed in a hot oven and stirred frequently until it is a delicate brown. The other ingredients are a teaspoon of salt, a cup of peanut butter and one and a half cups of water. Mix the peanut butter, water and salt and heat. When this mixture is not stir in the flour which should also be hot. Beat the mixture until it is stiff. Then add the dough should be of a consistency that it can be dropped from a spoon. Bake in small cups in an ungreased pan. This makes 16 biscuits, each of which contains one-sixth of an ounce of protein.
