cannot long be done. They have endured everything that we might win the war. The war is over and they will not much longer put up with these prohibitive prices. Some way of escape must be found or they will find an escape that will not be pleasant for any of us. Right down in the bottom of your heart and mine we firmly believe that these high prices are nothing but plain STEAL-ING, by some one, politely called profiteering. The trouble seems to be that every one, farmer, merchant, middleman, wholesaler, manufacturer and laborer all want a big bite out of everything they handle. They want the other fellow, to drop down on the price first, so they will not lose a cent, but themselves get the very last suck out of the lemon that for three years has been yielding them delicious profits.

Meanwhile the poor suffer, and starve and perish! Talk about humanity!
