here was a Corpenter one day long since. Who dared the wrath of God, Called Him intimately Friend Nothing happened save a courage came to the man, a torrential

There were certain ones Who had kept God very anug, Swathed Him in mystery; Evoked Him with a vast creaking of machinery, And careful display of - prerogative, The people were very properly awed. The Carpenter troubled them - presently. They were like to lose prestige. They carefully conceived a plan. It was to scourge the upstart Carpenter With whips of lips twisted in derision. Let Him buffet His soul weary Beating at laughter's barricade. And afterward He would be glad to slink Back to His shack, to be forgotten Save by His own ghosts.

The Carpenter lived through The disregard of His own family; Lived through the shocked amazement of His Home-town church. He won His way to the open roads To hear Himself called the enemy of God _____ An argument that seldom fails to catch the multitude.

And then Slander, the spawn of Hate and Darkness, Was loosed upon Him. This is Hate's most appropriate argument. He won His-right to lay down. His life as it pleased Him.

A Christian - Listen, Carpenter -Is one upon an enterprise in honor Along the sun-road of Fair Play. On that sun-road Pious cant, snivel and sophistry Puffed up over righteousness fare ill. For cheap tyrants. It is a hard road, Carpenter, Beset by the ancient cant and sophistry And swollen overrighteousness, and cheap tyranny.

It is not easy, Carpenter, o stride with you - but what can one do Who has seen the Face of a Man? A winter's wind-rage ' Leaped from the chariot of storm And ravaged my garden of its one sacred tree.

It was a shrine of love, Where many Mays my orioles nested. I loved the orioles' song. It was assuredly a God-breathed lilt Unchanged from the world's first dawning.

When the orioles came dancing with the South-Wind home They found no nesting-place. .

It is a drear garden, Lilas, That hath no resting-place for love. And how shall one live without a love-song?
