VERBENIAS Evening's crimson and topaz and purple; Of these Lilas, did my Gardener fashion verbenias.

I behold in the heart of the flowers shadowy faces of the dear ones who have honored my soul with comradery along the years. Some gave a look, a smile, in the swirl of a crowded street. I have not seen them since. I have not been separated from any one of them

Some filled the cups of a summer day with dreams. Some entered into the House of my poor life . . . and hung my bare walls with jewels. It has been 'costly to bide with me. Mine is a

You who have struggled with me; You who have been bowed down with my loads; You who have wondered why the dark roads held me;

You who have been kindly;— Comrades of the years, I am struggling toward the star-ways! It is a long climb toward the highlands of Life's trysting place, but some bright dawn we'll meet. There is a goodly garden-spot behind the stars where falls no shadow on the fields, and comes there never a blight.

And each shall find his perfect joy in building into his comrade's hearts the goodly wish, the glory-lighted dream we had for each other in Salary of principal this rain-drenched, murky, little earth.

This dream I fancied, Lilas, remembering many things, as I gathered a sheaf of verbenias.
