DOWN IN THE MOUTH

What cheer has the glow of the sun To the man who is down in the mouth If one's faith is played-out, and one's dream is done, And one lost where one's fight should have won? Winds may blow north and winds may blow south, But it's always ill wind to the man who is down in the mouth.

How failure fleers * * * *ah, pitiless! And the man who is down in the mouth Is mocked by the plaudits that herald success. Oh, the ghosts of shame are merciless, Winds may blow east and winds may blow south But it's always ill wind to the man who is down in the mouth.

The fifes of the Dawn are unheard By the man who is down in the mouth: "Fight through! Fight better! * * * * by no rallying's stirred;___ -The road ahead - gloom-hidden and blurred. Strong winds blow west and soft winds blow south, But it's always ill wind to the man who is down in the mouth.

It will be rallying wind that blows from man's or God's love-breast.

Man's strength and God's - what's strength for? For the man who is down in the mouth! They are fifers till homing dreams knock at the door, And the laggard man's a conqueror, And blow what wind may -- north, south, east, west

Y. FEELS TREMENOUSLY BETTER GOLDINE HELPS AS OTHERS FAIL

One big thing about Goldine is that its ingredients are made from the purest roots and herbs that can be gotten. So many look upon it as a wonderful medicine because it has in hundreds of cases restored restored health when all other medicines far ed. It's wonderfulness consists mostly, however, more in its superiority over medicines than anything else. As a perfect blending of natural roots and herbs, 1. stands alone as the correct preparation in the treatment of so many common ailments. This is why Cohoes people have found it such a beneficial remedy. As Mrs. L. Isabell Verito of 172 Lancaster street. has said: "I am feeling tremendously better after a bad attack of rheumatism, and can accredit my bi ber as can be. Goldine is a fine remedy.". Mrs. J. S. Hovey knows how faluable Goldine is. Goldine is sold by Brundage Drug Co.
