The Pharaoh up with morn... He knows the ache of tonesome hearts whose friends Have trod the Silent Trail; ري بالبسكون في بالمشاكل ولد العليا اليار He knows the tang of empty cups the meed

Of all who dream and fail. He knows the hurt of hearts of those whose gifts Of kindness reap a blow; He knows the cost of building fires when jeers

Drench each fresh-kindled glow; He weeps with all the dreamers jibed at by The clay-blind, flesh-dulled throng;

And His flesh flinches when weak helpless ones Are lashed by brutal wrong; He suffers in the gloom with doubting hearts

Whose tent is pitched in night; His face is marred with livid scars of those On whom sin sears it's blight.

And inasmuch as we play square with folk, Your folk, as we pass through The fields, we lift the load and lend a hand,

Oh, Friend of Friends, with You. We do not wonder, Friend of the sorrow's crown,

That Thou art knocking patient at our door. Thou hadst no home on earth, nor wife to give thee love-cheer, Nor children playing on the floor. But thou canst share, if we will let thee in,

What thou couldst not have, Oh, lonesomest of earth. In the joy that thou bringest to homes Where the gentle grace of love abides at the hearth.
