FIGURES SHOW EXTENT OF JUNIOR PROJECT

Report of State Leader Indicates That 11,856 Boys and Girls Have Participated

That the agricultural and home economics project work with boys and girls has become an important part of the extension activities of the State College of Agriculture is shown by some figures given out at Ithaca by the state leader of junior extension.

During the fiscal year, 11,856 boys and girls have been supplied with approximately 175,000 pieces of published matter, most of it written expressly for the junior club work. They have carried out their work under the direction of 17 county leaders and 640 local leaders. The latter were trained by subject-matter specialists from the college, in 16 county and 60 local leaders' training conferences.

Gained Dual Training

Not only have these boys and girls received a training in the technique of agriculture and homemaking, but they have also acquired specific business training, as shown by the fact that 7907 boys and girls kept records of their projects, and borrowed approximately $20,000 on legal notes from banks throughout the state. There were 4800 junior exhibitors, at the state fair and at 143 county and 233 community fairs and exhibits. Trips and tours for workers, costing $2,379, contributed proportionately to the education of the boys and girls participating.

The value of the production resulting from the projects carried on by all these boys and girls amounted to $186,478. This was produced at a cost of $124,749, leaving a value above cost of $61,729.
