

Keep smiling, but don't contract that silly grin that won't come off.

The days of wars are not over for the simple reason that the days of man are still here.

When a fellow becomes too wise for his day we just put him down for a fool and let him rip.

If Mr. Harding continues to keep his mouth shut he may slide into history as the fellow who didn't say it.

Will some one kindly mention the league of nations occasionally? We don't want to forget the dear thing entirely.

If the American people get much richer some of us will have to get poor again in order to become conspicuous.

Prohibition has proven quite successful in spots. But where are the spots?

Optimistic reports continue to float out from the arms conference, but up to date none of them appear to have exactly lit.

Beware how you tell people you are happy every day of your life. Only the weak of mind are allowed that privilege.

True, limitation of armaments may reduce taxes, but who wants to forego the privilege of bragging over the size of his income tax?

Occasionally we hear of some fellow who never says an unkind word to his wife. But that isn't strange. It requires inordinate courage in some cases.

And still, if the excitement dies down entirely in Washington there remains the possibility that Mr. Hughes will open his mouth and make another noise.

Evidently the government of Ravaria is hungry, since it is arranging to punish all heavy eaters. The eaters ought to let the government fill up first.

After reading all of the varied reports that are being sent out from Washington one's point of view seems to be conspicuous for its lack of a point.

The former emperor of Austria would be quite justified in sparing up a broad grin. He has induced the allies to ship him to Madeira and pay his household expenses.

Altho he is surrounded by the high dignitaries of the world, they say Mr. Hughes remains as cool as a cucumber. Of course you know just how cool a cucumber is.

All the world seems to be looking to the United States for financial relief. Eventually, when everybody else is taken care of, it is possible we may be able to do something for ourselves.

When the average college graduate returns home with his sheepskin in his hand he is prepared to revolutionize the world. If that is wise he begins the revolution first.

BE HAPPY

MAKE UP YOUR MIND, please and don't worry over the bills. They won't come due until next year. That sounds a long way off, whether it is or not.

Browse around town and look into the stores. You may be surprised at some of the things you will find. We've seen a lot of them and we know.

We suspect that Andover merchants are attempting to make London and Paris jealous — or perhaps they know the discriminating taste of Andover people and are simply trying to meet their expectations.

At any rate the "barriers" are there, in the stores, waiting to be picked. And believe us, they are worth picking.

Make the most of Christmas. We won't have another one this year.

Christmas Finds
Hornell Aglow

This is a Christmas long to be remembered. Great are the preparations the merchants of Hornell have made for it and great are the throngs that are flocking to the big, bright stores. From morning to evening they come, these contented, happy shoppers.

And why not? Prices are back where a dollar means something. In many lines prices are actually lower than even "before the war." In others there has been a marked decrease and nowhere have prices been so deeply cut as in Hornell.

For Hornell merchants are not here for Christmas trade alone. They are in business twelve months out of the year. If they can sell you better goods at less prices, if they treat you fairly, honestly and honorably, they know you will become a regular customer. And that is what they are building on. That is why they say with all confidence, "Come to Hornell for your Christmas shopping." They know you'll become a steady visitor after that.

The city and its splendid stores are all aglow with lights and gay with beautiful things. In a few nights, myriads of incandescent bulbs will alight from the Yuletide decorations in Main Street. It will be a sight worth seeing. The business men provide it for your enjoyment and the children's delight.

Christmas stocks are complete. There is nothing that you can't find here. Every Christmas wish has been anticipated. Courteous and careful clerks will wait upon you and try to be helpful. They will show you what you want to see and you may rest assured that the price will be a fair and honest one.

What more could you want? Bring the family to Hornell and let them see the sights. It will be half of their Christmas. A cordial welcome awaits you in any Hornell store.
