HAVE A DRINK

ARE you, by chance, worrying over the "terrible thirst"? Drink a glass of water. In fifteen minutes drink another. Keep on drinking until you have consumed at least two quarts in the run of the day.

It won't harm you and it will do you a lot of good.

As you become accustomed to large quantities of water you will gradually lose that thirst for something stronger. In time you may even be able to grin at the other fellow with that longing and furtive look on his countenance.

Then, too, the more water you drink the less medicine you will need. It is the greatest of all aids to indigestion or constipation.

Have a drink of water on us.

Commercial Art.

"Don't you think the theater has become sadly commercialized?"

"If," replied Mr. Stormington Barnes, "by 'commercialized' you mean affording opportunities to make large sums of money, I cannot say that I have noticed it personally."

Justifiable Pride.

Robinson—What's that rooster across the street crowing so for? Roosters don't lay eggs.

Crowley—No, but he's done something more wonderful. He just crossed the busy street without being hit by a fast automobile.
