FOLKS AND FOLKS.

Now Simon was a fellow to stay at home and mend his nets contentedly, But Andrew was off to the town when their boats came in from the sea— A gad-about, locking and listening, he. Now Simon was wont to sit by the fire when Andrew came home to tell his tale, And ponder this happening, balance that act—hit the head of the nail. A well-grounded man at the heart down under the shale.

Now stay-at-home folk are goodly folk, and of such are cities and nations made. They are the stones on which, belike, the kingdom of heaven itself is laid, And bulwarked to stand 'gainst the powers of darkness arrayed. But gad-about folk range the earth's and sky's lanes. They fret the heart, they bruise the feet. But to climb to the Morning Star's rim where the drums of the Great God beat, To bring back the Flame for the Stay-at-Homes' street.

To know how good a cigarette really can be made you must try a National Museum. This institution, among the most famous of the world, encourages scientific investigation and researches in different parts of the world. One of the recent explorations was the Smithsonian African Expedition, in charge of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt.

In the National Museum or the Old Building, as it is sometimes called, all objects of art and foreign research and objects of natural history are found. The historical collections contain personal relics of the presidents of the United States, of the statesmen and soldiers who have been prominent in the history of our country. The two most interesting were the Washington and Grant collection. The Washington relics included the uniform worn by him as Commander-in-Chief of the Army. The original flag, which floated over Fort McHenry and inspired Francis Scott Key to write "The Star Spangled Banner" was another interesting relic.

In the afternoon, by special invitation, we were able to visit the Department of the Interior. The most interesting thing here was a movie, illustrating drilling and the production of oil. After the movie we were shown a very interesting demonstration of the value and the use of liquid air. The method by which this liquid air is produced, and the machine used were explained to us. We visited the room where some of the largest maps were published. We also had the opportunity to look through the largest lens in the world.

During the demonstration the man took an ordinary rubber ball and put it in some liquid air. He then took it out and dropped it on the floor. It broke like a piece of glass. Next he took a small match box and filled it with mercury. He placed it in the liquid case and placed upon it a small stick. After leaving it there for a short time, he broke away the outside of the match box and he then had a small hammer. The liquid air when poured from one container to another looked like snow and when thrown on the floor it evaporated like smoke. Liquid air is almost at absolute zero, which is 273° below zero, so tends to freeze or harden everything which it comes in contact with.

This amazing demonstration and the movie, which was given us free, proved to make our most interesting day on the trip.

NO SUNLIGHT FOR KING TUT

The expected arrival in London of the treasures from the tomb of Pharaoh Tutankhamen has led British scientists to urge that a special room in the British Museum be set aside for their exhibition, and that only electric light be used in their display. It is feared that exposure to sunlight or diffused daylight would fade the ancient hangings and cause them to lose their beauty.

An extensive series of experiments covering a period of three years has recently been concluded by the Museum officials, and the injurious effect of daylight upon museum specimens was clearly demonstrated. The violet and ultraviolet rays were found responsible for the fading of colors, and these can be filtered out of sunlight only by the use of a yellow glass unsuitable for exhibition purposes. Electric light, on the other hand, is so largely free from these harmful rays that even diffused daylight was found to be six times as destructive as the light of the incandescent lamps.

A study of various specimens under daylight conditions showed perceptible color changes due to the light-rays, whereas similar specimens kept under blackened glass showed no fading, although the glass was exposed to the heat of the sun. The color-changes thus shown to have been due to the light-rays varied in time from ten days for a moth wing, to 175 days for a tiger-skin and 1485 days for an antelope skin.

The first light that shone in the Pharaoh's tomb after thirty centuries of darkness was an electric light, and if the proposed plan is carried out, his earthly remains and trappings will never see the sun again.

Mr. Harding has sprung a great surprise upon the American people. He intimates that he will accept a second term.

They say an honest man has nothing to fear, but it's a fact that most of them are scared stiff for fear some rascal will annex their dough.

Tidbits From Our School

The cabinet for the month of May was elected last Monday. The following were chosen to serve:

Eighth Grade, Edna Barrett. First Year, Helen Smith. Second Year, Viola Wildman. Third Year, Loretta Quigg. Fourth Year, Thelma Alvord.

The base ball team is coming fine, as everyone must know. The local high team plays at Belmont to-day.

The pictures which were taken a week ago, came and were distributed through the school last Tuesday. Large group pictures are sold for a quarter, six individual pictures for ten cents and the basket ball teams also for ten cents. The pictures all proved to be fine.

A social meeting of the Parent-Teachers' Association will be held Tuesday evening, May 15, 1923. Everyone is urged to be present and new members to the association are always welcomed heartily. The principal number on the program for that evening will be a debate about the following proposition: "Resolved that more good will be done by the establishment of industrial training in our school than by the employment of a community nurse." This debate promises to be a heated and serious one. Also it is planned to have the Community Chorus sing on that evening. Take an interest in your school and plan to attend this meeting.

The Civics Club have placed signs on one part of the school yard which ask the students to keep on the sidewalk so as to preserve the grass. This club is doing beneficial work by helping to beautify the ground and the inside of the school building as well.
