

LETTER FROM DR. J. P. CLEARY

her sorrow, she was returning to the scene of her childhood, after an absence of more than 20 years, not knowing the present exact whereabouts of her two sisters.

On board the vessel was Henry Sullivan, of Lowell, Mass. He was crossing to make his eighth attempt to swim across the English Channel. In physique, general appearance and manners Sullivan resembles very much our esteemed Lawrence Cocoman.

As is now well known, Sullivan succeeded in his task, being either the third or fourth individual who has far have done so, though many have tried.

The English Channel, at its narrowest point, is 27 miles in width. It is one of the most dangerous channels in the world, it being not only rarely always rough but has had whirlpools, cross currents and under currents. Sullivan who, of course, is an expert swimmer, was in the water 27 hours. According to the reports he was at one time within a mile and a half of the coast of France when an undercurrent carried him out to sea a distance of eleven miles, but he stuck to the task. Sullivan told me he was going to make it this time or sink, and make it he did. While in the water he wore goggles to protect his eyes. The constant beating of the waves almost wore the skin from his face. Before going into the water his body was well rubbed with oil in order to lessen as much as possible the irritating and chilling effects of the water on the skin. On the tug watching Sullivan swim were officials of the Channel Swimming Association and friends who sang songs and played music in order to make things pleasant for the swimmer.

Prior to the recent war the "Empress of Scotland" belonged to Germany, and at that time was known as the "Empress of Germany." It is a large and splendid boat. The cuisine was very good. The sleeping accommodations for the second class are not so good as those on other boats. The berths are constructed in a manner to safeguard against rolling out when the ship swerves from one side to another, the side boards extending upward several inches above the level of the body when reclining in them. They reminded me of coffins, and after adjusting myself in one at night I imagined all sorts of things, some amusing, some morbid.

In ocean travel there is a surprising difference in prices for first and second class. I prefer to travel in second class not only because of the big saving in money but because one meets a more likable class of people. In the first class the passengers are either very rich or four-flushers, to use the parlance of card players.

While passing thru the Straits of Belle Isle I saw several ice bergs as well as several spouting whales. With the exception of Alaska, New Foundland is probably the most valuable fishing waters in the world. The ice bergs were not very large, at least not the part protruding above the water, the average size being about equal to that of an ordinary cottage. One ice berg was as close to the boat as the width of Main Street, Andover. With its sharply defined edges and its immaculate whiteness it presented a rare sight, beautiful and majestic, looking like a huge altar in a Catholic or Episcopal church. At the top were hundreds of wild sea birds, divers, the sailors called them, all screeching and moving, agitated it seemed by the passing of the ship.

Don't keep a stiff upper lip. You can smile better when it is limber.

Keep smiling. It is easier than grinning and sweeter than a frown.

A For Sale ad, written with some selling-sense in it, will sell the used things for something like their actual value in cash.

"Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." The Christian spirit it has always been the spirit of freedom—freedom from worldliness and selfishness, freedom from fear and anxiety, freedom from creed and dogma and doctrine. Attempts are being made today to fetter the mind, abstract creeds and worn-out dogmas. "Fundamentalism," falsely so-called, is seeking to substitute a belief for a life. The fundamentalists have been able to capture a good word as a cloak for worn-out ideas. They seek the husk rather than the kernel. In shifting the object of faith from a person to a dogma, the fundamentalists have themselves departed from a fundamental of New Testament Christianity. The Christian life and the Christian spirit is too large to be fenced in by obsolete creeds, and the Christian faith needs no props to bolster it against attacks. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is Liberty."

We welcome YOU to all the services of OUR church.

THEY ARE PREPARING

THIS ought to appeal to your imagination, if not to your patriotism.

A British military official says that in the next war there will be fighting craft that fly like hawks, swim like ducks, waddle like armored tanks, and dive like seals.

It is a battle of wits between nations, he says, and the work of invention and creation is being rapidly carried on behind closed and closely guarded doors.

What is America doing?

C. D. STRAIGHT DEAD

Former Editor of Olean Times Dies at Work in Mount Clemens.

Mount Clemens, Mich., Aug. 22.—Charles D. Straight died here at the home of his son, Alan G. Straight, on Tuesday night, 58 years old. He was born in Cattaraugus in 1865 and when eighteen years old began publishing The Cattaraugus Times. Two years later he took over the Olean Times, then a morning paper, which he ran until 1910, when he retired to a farm near Olean. Two years later he issued a paper in Waverly named the Wayside Press in the interest of the Bull Moose movement. In 1913 he came to Mount Clemens and took charge of the Daily Leader and the Weekly Press following the death of S. C. Price, editor and owner.

Mr. Straight is survived by his son, Alan G. Straight, and a daughter, Emily, and a brother, John P. Straight of Cattaraugus.

Wool Frocks Where Clever Lines go With Practicality

To have as chic lines in one's practical, everyday Frocks as in one's more formal ones is an achievement of which to be proud. The simplest coat Dress chosen here will be ultra smart. Many of the new ones are of twill or rep, well tailored. A little less severe are Wool Frocks of unbelted lines with a flare here or there. Navy, brown and fallow are colors of the season that make these frocks more winning.

Silk Dresses for Every Woman's Fall Afternoon

Silk Frocks of Fall do surprise one. When their fronts are straight their backs are full, and vice versa. Every crepe Dress shows its satin side and when it is not lace trimmed is often enlivened with a bit of silk. These are frocks typical of what smart women will wear for afternoons.

A Sale of Remnants

We have a great many Silk Remnants on hand and will close them out at very low prices; also remnants of Dress Trimmings and Laces.
