

RICHARD LLOYD JONES SAYS Justice is the Goal of Civilization

Virtue finds its truest expression in justice. Liberty and equality are empty words unless they rest upon justice which at all times is the true principle for humanity. Separate liberty or equality from justice and neither can stand. The passion of all great prophets throughout all ages has been for justice.

It is the one-word definition of the Golden Rule. It was not only the basis of the teachings of Jesus but of all great religious seers and prophets. Each in his turn and time and in his own way said the same thing. Confucius put it: "What I do not wish men to do to me, I also wish not to do to them."

Justice is virtue; it is never passive or indifferent. It is the truth in action. Justice may be violent; it is always violent to the one who offends it. We may prize success, covet wealth, seek honor, but none of these can satisfy unless they come through justice.

He is great who, for justice's sake, can forget friends, kin, self-interest—all to fight for or to work for that which is right for another, a stranger perhaps, or even an enemy. We cannot secure justice for ourselves through denying justice to others. It is not in the order of things, for justice is consistent, impartial and always fair.

Though justice is impartial it is not blind. Science is governed by its laws.

The nation that loves liberty most sincerely and that fights only for human justice is seldom found in the fraternal enmities of war and then only in a twofold war made holy by the passion for justice. The nation that covets property and men, that seeks to enrich itself by devastating its neighbor, is found most often in the throes of war and then for the shameful and unsatisfying end of a deadly defying justice. And as with nations so with men. Such nations come to no good end.

"Justice," said Daniel Webster, "is the greatest interest of man on earth. It is the ligament which holds civilized beings and civilized nations together."

Happiness and progress are secured only when justice is honored.

Poem by Uncle John

Since I've been wearin' glasses, I command a better view of myself an' my surrondin's than my naked eye could do. . . . They have broadened my perspective in a gratifyin' way—dill my neighbors pay attention to meet anything I say.

A feller can't help smilin' when he puts his glasses on, an' views his feller-mortals with their imperfections gone. . . . They used to look so snooty, with so much to criticize,—O, it's powerful misleadin' when ye got defective eyes!

When the age fer wearin' glasses fetches hair of silver grey, we can love our neighbors better, as their fallin' melt away. . . . If we keep our sight corrected by self-sacrificin' art, we attain that calmer vision, which endows a nobler heart.

Wearing Glasses

"It's powerful misleadin' when ye got defective eyes!"

Carlyle wrote that labor, wide as earth has its summit in heaven. If he were writing today he would change labor for the cost of living.

If any of the readers of this newspaper are puzzled what to do with their time let them count the number of letters in the news columns and see the amount of work they buy for a penny or two—all other labor and material eliminated.
