PRUNE THE ORCHARD BUT PRUNE IT RIGHT

Cutting Out Big Branches Likely to Injure Tree Instead of Benefit.

Prune brother, prune with care. This paraphrase of Mark Twain's famous phrase might be taken as a motto by the orchard men of New York State, say the pomologists at the state agricultural college, who declare that many old apple trees are carrying too much wood. They warn, however, against cutting out the large branches, since this is likely to injure the tree rather than benefit it.

The proper way to make this thing is to cut out a number of small branches about the size of the finger, or possible up to an inch or an inch and a half in diameter, thruout the tree. This practice avoids water sprout growths and rejuvenates the remaining fruit spurs.

The college has studied enough orchards where this practice has been followed to know that it usually results in a better set of fruit of larger size. Trees handled in this way further, are more effectively sprayed, the color of the fruit is improved, and its market value increased.
