THE HOME PAPER IN VERSE

A Series on the Country Weekly Published in Promotion of Home Paper Week Feb. 3-9.

Home paper week, which will be observed throughout New York State February 3-9, does not seek to discourage the reading of city dailies and magazines. It seeks only to point out that the home weekly is a community institution and renders quite a different service from those other publications, printed at a distance, and a service which they cannot possibly render. This peculiar service, and the sentiment, if you please, which the thoughtful resident of the smaller communities has for his home paper, are well set forth in these verses the writer of which is unknown to the News. I read the daily paper—read the state and foreign news, Of the doings here and yonder, and of leading statesmen's views. Read of wreck and fire, and murder, baseball, politics and crime, Marriages and births and dyings, all the happenings of time. Read the whole edition over, from the first page to the last, News and comments, facts and fancies, things to come, things of the past. Then aside I thrust that paper for it's no more good to me, Half the things that I've read over soon my memory will flee. Then I get the home town weekly, and with keen and eager eye, Read the news it has to tell me, news that's never dull or dry. For the news that's in that paper tells of folks I know and love, Folks who are both friends and neighbors and whose goodness I can prove. Tells of school and church, and college, lodge, society and store, Town improvements, council's doings, squibs and personals galore. Having read this good town paper, read and swelled myself with pride. I crank up my ancient flivver and thru town and country ride. Far away sometimes it takes me, in to other towns and states. Where I may take notes and figures and make mental estimates. Then returning to my roof-tree, call my neighbors to my side And declare "So help me Hannah here I ever will abide." And with each returning Friday, eagerly I watch and wait, For a woman who is bringing the old weekly to my gate. Oh, I must have the great dailies magazines and trade reviews, But the things that makes me happy is the home-town weekly news. "An Integral Part of Your Community is Your Home Paper."

FROM THE OIL FIELD

It is understood that the deep test well on the Ainsworth farm, drilled by Pierce of Wellsville and company is a duster and the iron is being pulled. It was drilled to around 1,500 feet. The well on the White farm is reported as being a medium producer and indications are that other wells will be put down soon on this lease. —Wellsville News.
