Agrigraphs

Pasture helps make swine profitable. Do you pasture yours?

Harness need repairing? Why not do it yourself? Bulletin F. 169 from the state college at Ithaca tells how.

When buying fertilizer, remember that it isn't what you pay that counts as much as what you get for what you pay.

Time invested in community meetings and farmers' institutes ought to be credited to the profit side of the ledger.

Uncle Ab says that the man who can't find anything to do on the farm doesn't deserve to be there in the summer.

The merciful man is as thoughtful of the way his family is housed as he is of the quarters for his cattle.

Dispatches from France report that the Merite Agricole is to be conferred on French families that have tilled the same soil for three centuries. There are 750 such families in France. One family has held the same land since the reign of Charlemagne. Another family at Colombes, near Gap, has worked its farm for a thousand years.

Growth. The teacher told us there was a little girl who had just been promoted to the first grade. But on the first day she got homesick for her kindergarten teacher, so she was allowed to visit the kindergarten for a few minutes. She looked over the crowd of new pupils in their little chairs, and then she looked up at the teacher with a tender and amused smile. "Aren't they cute?" she whispered.

SPEAKING PIECES

Long years ago when I was young and fairly ready with my tongue, before the rheumatism had lamed me, before these classic rhymes had lamed me or gentle Hannah came and lamed me, I earned a local reputation by loud and fervent declamation. About Ben Adhem, may his tribe increase, was long with me a favorite piece. Old Ironsides at anchor lay, and Paul Revere at break of day rode down thru Concord like a streak that I might have good rhymes to speak. I stood right up and asked the crowd why mortal spirit should be proud, called freedom from her mountain height and buried More at dead of night. Under the spreading chestnut tree, the blacksmith swung his sledge for me. The boy stood on the burning deck, the all but him had left the wreck. Such classic songs I still rehearse; I have no use for modern verse. He is a faker and a cheater whose rhymes have neither rhyme nor meter. The present poets seldom write good stuff for school boys to recite. If I taught school in modern times I'd make the kids learn good old rhymes and if they sprung free verse on me I'd lay them prone across my knee or cut a bunch of plant switches and wrap the same around their britches.

A week's trial and the comment of your friends will prove the value of this simple advice.
