YOU NEED NOT FAIL

Great fortunes are sometimes made in small towns and in strange ways. In Good Ground, L. I., an old fashioned hamlet with a couple of streets and half a dozen stores where motoring tourists stop for gas, or crackers and cheese, and then speed on to more pretentious villages, lives Walter King, known all over the world as an unusual designer of women's hats. Not so many years ago when other boys went clam-digging or fishing King would hurry home from his father's small general store and design hats from the wires taken from bales of hay, covering the frames with calico, snipped from bright colored bolts, or with tea matting "swiped" from tea boxes.

His family was poor in those days and they had a hard time of it to educate Walter. His education ended when he graduated from the local high school. The great problem of earning a living was partly solved when a year after graduation he left home to become a window dresser in a Southern city. A lover of beauty with inherent instinct for color combinations he was able to hold his job which in those days was a triumph, but the pay was barely enough to buy the necessities of life, and totally insufficient to "help out" at home. On the threshold of manhood his father's business began to wane, and his mother was stricken with an incurable disease. Walter was ordered to return home and assume the work of the store. This he did, but rising before dawn and working late into the night, he began to design hats as a profession and shortly afterwards when placed on display in the little store they caused so much furor in the town that their fame became nation-wide. A few years later Walter King became the most sought after milliner in the East. Today King has an international reputation and is called a rich man.
