MEETING MR. WRIGHT--WOMAN HATERS

I dressed leisurely and with unusual care. I always enjoyed getting into my filmy silken underthings. Then I stood and surveyed my evening frocks. I decided that I would choose the most sophisticated of them all. I decided on an orchid georgette, starred with rhinestones, that glistened like fireflies as I moved. A scarf of violet tulle with wispy ostrich ends and a bandeau of brilliants for my bob completed my attire.

Marjorie had said that Curtis Wright, who was dining with my father, was an impenetrable person who disliked all modern girls. It did not make the slightest difference to me what Mr. Wright thought, but the challenge from Marj was too much for my pride.

I heard Johnson tell them in the front door and then voices in the hall. First I had that of letting them find me curled up cozily on the chaise-longue in the sun-parlor, yet maybe that pose would be too suggestive of the clinging-vine. So I decided to burst in on them. Besides, walking down the steps that led into the living room was always effective. I had tried it, with satisfactory results, before.

"Sallie!" exclaimed Father, rising and coming forward. "This is a pleasure seldom bestowed upon your dotting old Dad. I am especially glad that you decided to grace the table tonight because I have brot Mr. Wright home." He turned to the tall, immaculately groomed person at his side.

"Wright, this is my daughter."

The guest bent low over my hand, with an air that was courtly, but the exaggeration of the movement was tinged with satire.

"Oh, I say, Wright, would you like a drink?" Father broke in at the wrong moment. "I've some excellent whiskey, maybe you'd prefer a little rum."

Mr. Wright accepted and they moved over to Father's corner cabinet. In a moment Johnson appeared, in answer to Father's summons, with the interesting paraphernalia for making highballs.

I felt the need of a little boost myself, after the drinks I had had with Ted the night before, and must have looked longingly, for while Father was fussing around the table Mr. Wright came over to me. "Are you joining us?" he inquired in a low voice.

"Father would pass out of the picture if I did," I answered, "but I certainly need something to pick me up."

"Can you suggest any way that I might be of service?" Altho he was perfectly gallant in his faultless manner, I felt that he was laughing at me.

"Oh, it isn't a matter of life or death?" I said flippantly. "guess I can survive."

I turned toward the radio and in a minute the room was flooded with the soft melody of a hushed orchestra playing a fox trot.

"Good, Sallie, we'll have music with our meals," Father said jovially coming over to me and pinching my cheek. "Wright, she's a mighty fine little girl."

I was furious with Father and for the first time in my life, his "little girl" attitude irritated me beyond words. He might just as well have stripped off my dashing evening gown and clothed me in a pin-a-doodle—I hated to be made ridiculous in the eyes of Mr. Wright, whose whole manner stamped him as a man of the world.

Dinner was announced. I was glad I had used candles for they create an interesting atmosphere. I can remember my mother having often said that any woman was more alluring in their radiance and that many romances were born under their faint and mellow glow.

"What's the program for tonight?" Father asked.

"A dance at the Willow Branch Club, Alma Davis' dance for her visitor. Then later I'm hoping that some of the crowd will go to Gonz's and get chow mein."

"Sallie, dear," Father began, "do you think you should be going about to these funny Chinese places at all hours of the night? I saw where a chop-suey house was raided a few nights ago because, as the paper had it, some of the society buds and their escorts had been going there and smoking opium in search of a new thrill. I know the place you go couldn't be anything like that and of course there's always a chap-crone."

"Certainly, Father, and hoop-skirts! For they go hand-in-hand."

"Why, Sallie, what do you mean?" demanded Dad.

Before replying I noticed that Mr. Wright, who he had remained silent, was interested in the conversation.

"Just exactly that, dear old fogie. Chap-crone aren't good this season."

"We aren't a bunch of kids, you know, Father, and we are perfectly capable of taking care of ourselves."

It wasn't often that I talked so plainly to Dad, but I was determined that Mr. Wright should not be under the impression that I was a child.

"Sallie, Sallie, of course I trust you, my dear," agreed Father. "I expect you to use your own good judgment about such things, only please use discretion. Please don't misunderstand me, now, daughter, I know you do none of the things we hear gossiped about town."

"As a rule, most of that is propaganda inaugurated by reformers who are past the age of being tempted themselves, don't you think?" suggested Mr. Wright.

Whether he thought so or not it was the polite thing, at that moment, for him to have said. However, his remark was surprising because, from what Marjorie had said, one would have thought he was in sympathy with the "gossips."

"Miss Sallie," Johnson appeared at my side. "There's a gentleman to see you. I told him you were at dinner, but he said he had to see you at once, ma'am."

Agrigraphs

Many a man is known by the way he treats his horses on the hot days of August.

Wheat needs a firm seed-bed. Roll it well and often; a rolling after the seed is in a good thing.

Uncle Ab says he's generally found that silence is better than what some folks call "bein' real frank."

It never rains but it pours, and while it pours is a good time to fix for fall work the harnesses that have needed mending.

"Save the surface and you save all" is particularly applicable to the tin valleys or flashings on roofs. Once a year is not too often to paint them.

In 1909 an eight-ounce packet of Sudan grass was sent to America from Khartum, Africa, a forage crop valued at nine million dollars is now produced from it in the United States.

The state college of agriculture at Ithaca is offering new marketing courses which should be especially attractive to farmers' sons interested in the business which grows out of farming. A card to the college brings its circular concerning the courses.

Live Stock and Meats

Chicago hog prices ranged from 15c lower to 20c higher than a week ago, closing at $10.20 for the top and $8.90-10 for the bulk. Medium and good beef steers 25-65c lower at $4.50-9.50; butcher cows and heifers to 25c higher at $3.75-10; feeder steers steady at $4.50-11.25. Fat lambs steady to 25c lower at $11.25-13.90; feeding lambs 25-35c higher at $11-13.10; yearlings 25c lower at $8.50-11.50 and fat ewes steady to 25c higher at $4-8. Stocker and feeder shipments from 12 important markets during the week ending August were: Cattle and calves 36,518; hogs 2,840; sheep 50,678. In eastern wholesale fresh meat markets beef and mutton are weak to $1 lower; veal is firm to $1 higher and pork loins $2 lower to $1 higher. August 11 prices good grade meats: Beef $15-17.50; veal $15-18; lamb $23-26; mutton $15-17; light pork loins $25-28; heavy loins $15-21.

Fruits and Vegetables
Eastern potatoes weakened in leading markets and at shipping points. Maryland and Virginia eastern shore cobbles closed at $1.50.

BUY HERD BULL WHEN THE DEMAND IS LIGHT

Time to Purchase is During Off Season; Don't Wait Till Last Minute.

Most farmers who buy herd sires wait until they need one and then rush out and get the first one they can lay hands on. And in this case following the crowd is the worst possible procedure. The successful breeder selects his herd sire when the demand is lightest, and gets a better bull at a lower price.

Forwarded men neither patch their roofs when it is raining or buy herd bulls when everyone else is doing the same thing. If a man needs a sire next spring, right now is an excellent time to start looking for him. The eternal law of supply and demand works as well in regard to bulls as it does with any other commodity, and the time to catch bears is when they are out; not when everyone else is bear-hunting.

So if a herd of cattle is worth having it's worth a little time and trouble spent in looking up its most important single unit, and the man who is wise gets his herd sire all lined up while the other fellow is putting it off till he isn't so busy.

What Industry Is More Heavily Taxed?

Out of every dollar which the American producers of Niagara power receive for electricity, 17 cents is paid out in taxes.

Few people realize this fact. It is the more astonishing when you realize that through efficiency and economy of operation the American producers are still able to sell their electricity at the lowest average price received by any generating system on the North American Continent.

Can you think of any other industry that is able to show a record like this under a comparable burden of taxation?
