Down by the Sea—and "Yates"

I noticed Mr. Wright was not drinking. After my second cocktail I insisted that he try one and held the glass up to him. "Please, just take the curse off it," I wheedled. He touched it to his lips but that was all, and he did that because it was the gallant thing to do under the circumstances. With all the rest of the crowd looking, to have turned me down would have been humiliating.

The music started. "Yates" has an orchestra that makes little thrills run all over me. I confided to my good-looking escort. "It's wonderful. That saxophone would make anyone commit murder—or even worse."

"Come on," I said and pulling at his arm started toward the room where they were dancing. They were playing a heavenly waltz. He danced, like I was afraid he would, in good time and perfect step, but without any of the latest variations.

I felt a warm glow of exhilaration. I glanced up at my partner. He was the most distinguished dancer on the floor and I longed to have him hold me closer.

The violins played the minor chords in "The Song of India," and I wanted to dance, dance, dance, as I had never danced before.

Ted broke on us.

When Ted and I had danced half way across the floor the orchestra changed into the waltz it had been playing into an Argentine tango. The other dancers left the floor and we knew it meant an exhibition.

"Ted and Sallie bravo!" shouted the others.

We had danced many times at charity entertainments and they knew us so well at "Yates" that at least once during the evening they played the tango for us that they had called "Sallie's."

Ted's arm about my waist tightened and became an embrace. He was more like a lover of the Pampas, red-blooded, fiery and impassioned. On we danced. We passed the darkened doorway and I saw Curtis Wright standing in the shadows. Thru the smoke of his cigarette I could see that his gaze was fastened on our movements, and yet his eyes

HIGHLIGHTS ON STATE CROPS

Rude Rural Rhymes

Tomatoes

The classic orange, with its flowers, perfumes the air in southern bowers and hangs a halo on the bride which frequently is justified. Its golden fruit is so romantic it darts round the poets' heads, with thots of kindred tropic sweets of sugarcane and senoreties. But I choose rural themes like Cato and sing the Bonny Best tomato. No orange you have ever bit has got a blooming thing on it. I'm glad that when the summer heats have made me choosy in my eats, tomatoes come with ripe red skins, brimful of health and vitamins. When winter rages o'er the land, I eat the ones that Hannah canned. You ought, like me, to form the habit and when you see a good one grab it. I bless the orange on its journey from Florida or California. No word of mine shall do it dirt, altho it's very apt to squirt, both in my eye and on my shirt. But we whose warts are not weighty should stick to fresh and canned tomato, and suck its juicy vitamins till they run down our double chins.
