Curtiss Wright, the Gentleman

"I've never seen her?" I asked Curtiss Wright laconically, when we had climbed the steep slopes of the sand-dunes and had settled ourselves snugly.

"Whom?" he was sitting beside me while I stretched my full length in the soft sand that sparkled with the hard glitter of diamonds.

"Why the lady in the moon, up yonder."

"Um—nope, don't believe I ever have," he answered.

"Wanna?" I hurried to get to the point and I tried to remember all the preliminaries just as Ted had first shown her to me at the Country Club that evening.

"I can not say that I am overly anxious to go searching for some vague and ethereal creature," he responded, "moreover, my eyes seem loath to leave the lady in the present landscape. Je suis content, my Komany maiden," he laughingly added.

None of the boys in our crowd talked in words of more than one syllable and it fascinated me to hear his French phrases, which he used so naturally that even a person with a smattering of the language could comprehend their meaning. I thought his conversation was not unlike the French phrases, clothing, as he did, the most platitudinous compliments in charm and majesty. His vocabulary I pondered his last pretty tribute; too, was compelling.

I turned my head to look at him while he made playhouses and le sand run thru his fingers. He was undeniably handsome and his body graceful, with that suggests agility and a splendid fitness to meet any emergency. Reserve strength was there too, and yet, I had an idea that in love, he might be as gentle as a woman.

I gazed up at the stars. The beauty of the tropical night seemed to enter my being. No wonder the whole world was beginning to love Florida. Even the moonlight was different and the stars up there were friendly. Big, yellow ones outlined the dipper. Florida stars—then the wind in the palms sighing like a restless virgin waiting for life and its completeness.

It was like Curtiss Wright and I were off on some desert island, the stretch of the sand-dunes only emphasized our seclusion. Long ago the voices of the swimmers had been lost in the distance.

"Well, do you want to see her?" I queried, moved nearer to my companion, and putting my face close to his. You see the moon—well there's a lady up there and there's also a man. I'm the lady and you're the man. Their profiles touch, like this; and, er, they kiss each other."

My face was against his. My eyes closed expectantly and my lips parted.

He caught me by the shoulders and his voice was tremulous.

"Don't Sallie, for God's sake, child, you mustn't play games like that. You don't know what you're doing. Look at me," he ordered, "where do you pick up such things?"

"Ted Billings taught me."

"Ted Billings, eh, the young devil?" he interrupted.

"Oh, don't be so proper," I called, "this time you really will see her." And I turned my face up to his, but he drew away sharply.

"No, thanks, I don't believe I care for your COMMUNITY KISSES!" He stood up, his eyes looking toward the white-caps of the ocean as if he were utterly oblivious of my existence.

"Oh, Mr. Wright," I called to him, "if it isn't against your puritanical principles, I'd like very much for you to go and dig me up a little snifter."

"A little drink, Mr. Holier-than-thou person." I was sitting up, and I shook my finger at him. "And when you return we'll talk it all over. I'll even listen to your complaint about my morals."

"I beg your pardon, I assure you it was not my intention to meddle. What shall it be, I am at your service?"

"Doesn't matter. Whatever you can manage."

He bowed courteously and departed.

Once again I lay supine, the soft sand was soothing. With my hands under my head I lost myself in the glories of the moonlight. Surely Nature had made Florida a garden-spot for lovers. Lovers, ah—if Curtiss Wright HAD kissed me.

A shadow, huge and terrible, fell across the sand in front of me when I was dreaming. It couldn't be Mr. Wright, I thought quickly; the Inn was a half mile off and he had only been gone a few moments.

I could stand it no longer. I looked behind me and as I moved my head I saw a man coming unsteadily in my direction.

I tried to scream and couldn't. In a twinkling I realized that I was at his mercy for the beach had long since been deserted.

As I jumped to my feet, he lurched forward and towered over me.

HIGHLIGHTS ON STATE CROPS

From New York State Dept. Farms & Markets
Sept. 9, 1924.

Apples in Heavier Supply

Receipts of apples have become liberal, the State Department of Farms & Markets announced on Tuesday. The market for fancy and well-colored was fair but ordinary and small fruit was neglected. Hudson Valley A grade 2-12 inch of all varieties brot around $4.00 a barrel. Western New York A grade Duchesse brot from 75c to $1 a bushel. Plums are having but a limited sale at 25-35c a four quart basket or 65-75c a bushel.

Grapes from the Hudson Valley became liberal in supply on Tuesday and prices tended downward. Most sales of Black, Delaware and Niagara grapes were made at 75c per 12-quart basket. Western New York Clapp's Favorite pears are becoming more plentiful.

State Vegetables

The cucumber market has been close to being demoralized. Tuesday sales ranged from 25-75c a bushel. Lettuce has further declined, Western New York stock bringing 75c-$1.00 a crate. Celery in the rough has held steady at from $1.75-2 per two-thirds crate. Carrots are still very low at 50c a bushel. Fancy beans lately have brot as high as $2.50 a bushel.

State Lambs and Dressed Veal

Since Labor Day state lambs have been arriving in numbers. The latest price was from $14.50-15.00 for prime state. Country-dressed veal is two cents a pound higher than a week ago, choice being at 19-20c a pound, fair to good 14-18c and common and small 10-13c.

Butter, Cheese and Eggs

Butter holds firm on the top grade with creamery salted higher score at 38½-39c a pound. The market is steady on eggs. Nearby henry white average extras sold on Tuesday at 52-54c a dozen. Cheese continues steady but inactive at from 19-19½c a pound for fresh whole-milk flats, average run.

Getting the Bugs

Ex-Supervisor O. A. Potter of Independence has a winner for a June bug story. He has a large open flame gas light in his back yard on the farm and on a couple of evenings (bugs, like humans often-times) played with the fire and payed the penalty. The first night Oscar and Linford raked up a large washtub about two-thirds full of the bugs—the second a sap bucket full.

If the writer is any judge this has anything of the kind chased until winded—not excepting C. L. Crittenden's toad that was waxed fat all summer snapping up every bug and worm that landed beneath his porch light at the store, nightly.
