OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

MONEY IN WOOD LOT

Within Ten Years it Can be Made to Produce at Profit.

That the farmers of America are beginning to avail themselves of one relief measure that is not dependent upon congressional legislation was brot out at the National Conference on Utilization of Forest Products, just concluded at Washington, D. C. "The time has come for the owners of 5,000,000 American farms to reap annually a crop worth $5 or more an acre from their 150,000,000 acres of wood lots and for our agricultural colleges to point out the importance of the wood lot timber crop even to those students who are not taking forestry courses," said Samuel T. Dana, director of the Northeastern Forest Experiment Station, located at Amherst, Mass. "Enough farmers, particularly of the New England and Middle States, are handling their wood lots scientifically under the guidance of the state and federal tree experts to prove that timber is a practical annual crop. Furthermore, there is an expanding market for timber that nothing short of a cosmic disturbance can shatter."

Almost any wood lot in any part of the country may be brot to the timber production point by scientific handling within ten years, according to Mr. Dana. After the wood lot has once begun to produce, it continues to do so with about one-sixteenth of the attention demanded by other crop producers. Besides, its crop is reaped at a time of year when other farm work is slack. Last year, when farmers who had been managing their wood lots as crop areas, were making on them $5 or more an acre, 4,000 farmers reported to the Census Bureau that their corn had netted them $2.45 an acre and that they had lost $1.92 an acre on wheat and $1.05 an acre on oats. Our tracts of virgin forest today contain 12,000,000 fewer acres than our farm wood lots and are remote from market, while the wood lots are usually conveniently located in this respect. All told, our wood lots from one-third of our so-called "forests." With our forests being conducted mostly at haphazard they are growing 12.8 cubic feet of timber per acre annually; while the drain upon them amounts to 52.8 cubic feet per acre annually. Germany grows 50 cubic feet per acre annually; France, 38; Austria and Switzerland, 35; Japan, 28.1, and Sweden, 23.6.

As the timber line retreats, the value of wood lot grows. In 30 years we will face a timber famine. Two industries absolutely dependent upon the trees, the lumber and paper industries, reported in 1919 that they had 75,000 establishments, 1,350,000 employees and a capital investment of $5,000,000,000. Wood lot owners need not fear that this chance of selling timber will get away from them. Mr. Dana said: "If the Forestry Service were given a free hand today, we lack the fundamental knowledge necessary to enable us to grow timber fast enough to stave off the impending wood famine."

Around Our House

The nickel trimming on the oil stove or coal range is always getting spotted and when the spots burn on they are difficult to remove. To keep the nickel in shining condition, says the state college of agriculture, a washing frequently in soap and water with a little soda added to cut the grease (a teaspoon to a quart of water.) Spots may be removed by polishing with whiting or any fine scouring powder moistened in ammonia. Wash, dry and polish the nickel after cleaning. There is nothing better to keep the top of the stove in good condition than a daily rubbing with a cloth which has been saturated with any unsalted oil. Special stove oils may be used. A brisk rub with wax paper such as comes around bread is also a help.
