

Sallie's Temptations

(Copyright 1924—By Gladys Baker)

CONCERNING SALLIE

Sallie is a modern, pretty young creature, with all the emotions and desires you yourself had when you were at that glorious age that lies somewhere between sixteen and twenty-five. Sallie is everywhere. The eyes of the world are upon the ultimate outcome of her moral code. Is she going to weaken her creed of right and wrong and stretch her philosophy to that of the girls who have a "good" time?

Your little girl is just where Sallie is. She must decide for herself. They are all Sallies at heart. Sallie's experience, put down truthfully from the pages of her life, may help your Sallie. Each chapter is complete in itself. Read it this week. You will enjoy it.—Editor.

In Which Sallie Contemplates Much

"Oh, Sallie, little Sallie, what have I done?" he murmured and suddenly released me. "I couldn't help it, I couldn't," he breathed, "you looked so beautiful and—and lovely. I'm sorry."

I resented the swift change in his manner. My spirit of pride was returning.

"Why?" I flung up at him, "because you disapprove of flappers?"

"Please don't," he urged, and he wore a hurt expression. "You don't understand a lot of things, Sallie, in spite of your 20th century sophistication. Come," he continued, offering me his arm, "let me take you back to the house, you should be sweetly dreaming."

Trying to lose consciousness in sleep was no easy matter.

I lived the moments over and over. Remembering his kisses my heart palpitated and my pulse quickened. I had come for one brief moment upon the fullness of joy, tipped it, found it sweet and suddenly it had vanished.

Love-making and petting parties at dances had for me been a frivolous and light hearted pastime, a thing that had left me serenely unchanged as if such episodes had not touched the real Sallie.

But those precious minutes with Curtis Wright in the garden! I wore a little superior air as if I were glad it had happened. At last I realized how love could make possible great tragedies or shining achievements.

But what of him who had awakened me?

My cheeks flushed in the darkness. I recalled his stilted, impersonal words when he had seemed to come to his senses. I had heard of men being swept off their feet by the sight of some woman whom they had not, for the moment, lovely.

Perhaps he really didn't care for me at all, I reasoned, and the thought brot sadness. Followed a night of dream-tossed restlessness.

The next day I found out from Mom Nellie that Mr. Wright had gone to New York on business. Although father's condition was undeniably improved, after Anne Coddington's open reproach at the Windsor, I decided to stay away from parties. Walks near the house, new books and telephone conversations constituted my only amusement.

Then came New Year's Eve. "Happy New Year, and a penny for your thoughts," cried Curtis Wright who had tiptoed out so lightly that I did not hear him enter. Altho I had not heard from him since that eventful night, I was overjoyed at seeing him. He chatted gaily of the new plays on Broadway and bits of good music while I listened intensely.

Then, finally, "What's on tonight?" he asked. "Is there a party?"

"Naturally," I replied eagerly, "one has to make New Year's resolutions."

"Where will the bunch gather?"

"Here," I answered. "They've taken dad to the Inn at Atlantic Beach. The ocean breeze will be good for him during his convalescence."

And you?"

"It was father's wish that I should have the crowd over for a party," I hurried on. "You'll come play with us, won't you?" I inquired anxiously.

"I'll be delighted," he responded, after a moment's consideration.

"And I'm not surprised about your father. I've had daily wires of his condition from Dr. Gray. That's one reason I went to New York," he continued, slightly embarrassed.

"You see, I don't like to go ahead with the job we're doing until he has completely recovered."

Then he hadn't run away just because of the scene in the garden. I was so happy. I wanted to sing and shout and whistle.

He made ready to leave. "May I have about three dances in a row?" he asked earnestly, "I want to witness those New Year's resolutions."

Tons of Diamonds, Rubies and Emeralds

Tons of artificial diamonds, rubies and emeralds are produced each year in the electric furnaces of the Niagara Power District. They are crushed, graded and fashioned into various forms for grinding, cutting and polishing all kinds of substances. They are absolutely essential in the manufacture of automobiles and hundreds of other commodities.

Before the coming of Niagara Power it was impossible to make artificial jewels commercially and real gems were too expensive for industrial use. Today you can scarcely think of a polished metal surface on which Niagara abrasives have not been used.

The manufacture of artificial jewels is just another instance of what Niagara Power has done for American industry.

The Niagara Falls Power Company sells electricity at the lowest average price received by any generating system on the North American Continent.
