Explains Our Prosperity

Says Lord Rothermere, the famous English publisher:

"Very many of the American artisans earn twenty pounds a week all the year around, and own not only the houses they live in but motor cars and expensive wireless sets besides. The explanation of their prosperity can be almost entirely compressed into two words—cheap power."

The American workman whose own muscles formerly bore the brunt of the heavy lifting and hauling, now controls and directs power machinery that does the actual work. Thus he increases his output and earns higher wages for shorter hours of work.
