TAXATION is somewhat like Mark Twain's comment ♥ on the weather: "A great deal has been said about it, but very little has ever been done." It develops that of the one hundred taxpayers' organizations that were formed in the past few years to seek to do something to curb the mounting cost of local government only a small fraction still carries on.

There is but one construction to be placed upon the petering out of well intentioned efforts to help the situation and to instill economy of operation into the minds of those responsible for high costs of local, state and municipal administration, and that is lack of i. terest in the subject on the part of those whose well fare it was hoped to safeguard. It probably is true that the actual taxpayers, iltimate consumers, out of whose pockets come sums that go into highway construction and upkeep) and the hundred other channels into which tax money flows, do not realize the amount they pay because is concealed in the price of the commodity upon which the tax is levied.

Indirect taxation is perhaps painless, but it is none the less heavy. It is contended that few better methods have ever been devised for building roads than thru the levy of a gasoline tax .- In this particular case . The entire question of taxation, local as well as federal, resolves itself into one of public interest, public information and public activity on behalf of standards of wise economy. If there is waste in city and state government it can only be checked by an aroused and aggressive electorate. It is the business of the as taxpayer to see that he gets his money's worth. useless to grumble without seeking rational relief.

A good roads movement has been started in Russia. That's fine, to have something good.
