"BLACKSHEEP"

life. She was taller than the Governor and carried herself with a suggestion of his authoritative bearing. Her face was a feminized version of the Governor's, exquisitely modeled and illuminated by dark eyes that swept Archie with a hasty inquiry from under the brim of a black picture hat.

"Julia, this is my friend, Mr. Comly."

Her "very glad, I'm sure," was uttered with reservations, but she smiled, a quick sad little smile. The Governor had introduced her as Julia, carelessly, as tho of course, Archie knew the rest of it. The Governor asked perfunctorily about her drive into town, and whether it had been hot in the country. Dinner was announced immediately and they sat down at a round table whose centerpiece of sweet peas brought a coolness into the room.

It seemed to Archie as he met a puzzled look in Julia's eyes from time to time that she was trying to account for him, and her manner he thought slowly changed. Her first defensive hostility yielded to something much more amiable. It was as tho she had reached a decision not wholly unflattering and might be a little sorry for her earlier attitude.

"Julia, if you brought those documents with you I'll take them up to my room and look them over. It's only a matter of my signature, isn't it? I'll be down at once."

"Very well, you will find them in my bag in the hall. I must start home very soon, you know."

"I had hoped you would spend the night here," said the Governor; "but if you won't I'm grateful for even this little glimpse."

The Governor left the room and reappeared with a small satchel, took out several bundles of legal papers and glanced at their superscriptions.

In a moment they heard his quick step on the stair.

"It is no doubt clear to you," Julia remarked, "that my brother prefers not to be alone with me."

"I rather surmised that," Archie replied with an ease he did not feel. He turned to drop his cigarette in the brass receiver at his elbow, avoid contact with her gaze, was bent upon him, discomfited. "We have but a moment, must have a care not to seem confidential. He didn't close the door, I think."

The draperies at the end of the room swayed a little and Archie walked back and glanced into the dining-room. He nodded reassuredly and she indicated a seat a nearer than the one he had taken. "Please don't be alarmed, but a singular fact that I know you met once, passing, at a Cambridge; it's a good while and we exchanged only a word, don't try to remember. I must fer you shouldn't."

Archie remembered; he had attended teas at Cambridge during commmment festivities and had always ad them. "It was not until we were at the table that I placed you night. I'm relieved, infinitely relieved, to know that you are my brother. How it came about none of my affair. But you are gentleman; in the strange ph thru which"—her lips formed speak a name but she caught herself up sharply—"thru which passing I'm gratified that your companionship. Once something very cruel happened to him; something that greatly embittered him; and after the first shock of she turned her head slightly and lips quivered.

"That is all," she said, and him again, with her beautiful accentuated, her perfect self—that touched him with an intimacy.

"LABRADOR IS CALLING"

Ever since Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Watson returned from their summer's trip down the St. Lawrence River, and to the south coast of Labrador, their friends have been eager to see the pictures they took of this unusual country. Now you will have the opportunity. The lecture "Labrador is Calling," will prove equally instructive and fascinating to old and young. It is being given under the auspices of the Senior Class of the High School.

Remember the date, Wednesday, Jan. 11, 1928, 8:15 p. m., at the Palace Theatre. Admission 25-50 cents.
