College education will not help the boy or girl who will not use their own initiative to develop a particular field of interest.

A great many young people today go to college, not because they want to learn, but for other reasons. Some want to avoid real work and have a good time. Many of them forget the things that were taught them in the common schools, and they forget because they were not interested.

Thomas A. Edison urges all young people before they reach their 20th birthday anniversary to discover something that they would like to do. This great inventor made his decision when he was 15 years of age, the brake is being applied. and is still doing it in his 82nd year. He declares' that any person 20 years of age, who does not know ! what to do, confesses that he is wasting time. The world today is filled with interesting things to do that the longest human life could not exhaust more than a small fraction of them.
