TELL ME AN INDIAN STORY

Dr. E. A. Bates, Cornell (Copyright 1933)

WINTER CLOUDS

The ceremonial for the snow has passed, when enemies are forgiven and harsh words forgotten, as a new trail has been blazed for all thru the New Year's festivities. The story telling grandmother has taught the ancient chants and customs thru the beads of the strings of historic wampum; but now she again has time to entertain the children. Gathered around her lodge fire, they plead for another story, with their bright eyes and shrill voices. To satisfy them she tells an ancient legend about the clouds:

"Long moons ago when the world was first made, the sky at winter-time was cloudless much as it is on clear midsummer days. The ground was covered with white snow and the trees, except the pines, stood bare. The cold wind whistled around the bark cabins; and with a cloudless sky, everything above and below looked dreary. "The children, too, missed the green leaves and changing colors over the landscape and they gave a wish that the sky might have clouds now and then. It is true, dark-gray, fierce-looking clouds came in great masses and covered all the sky and let down snowflakes to amuse the children. But the children also wished for bright clouds and the old bear in the sky heard their wishes. "So the old bear blew his moist breath into the heavy clouds and broke them up; he even made humps in some of them, and held on to the corners of others, until when they passed over the village, each cloud had a different shape; some like bears, some like wildcats, some like hills and even some like funny people. Ever afterward, the clouds took these strange shapes to bring smiles and imagination to all children in mid-winter.

Lloyd R. Watson, director of research at Alfred University, made demonstrations before a group of scientists at Cornell University showing how he had been able successfully to artificially inseminate a queenbee thus bringing about a controlled mating. Dr. Watson's method, with eight others, has been tried by the United States Department of Agriculture. Mr. W. J. Nolan, who conducts the experiments in the United States Bee Culture Laboratory in Somerset, Md., reports in government bulletin No. 328 that "the Watson method is the only one which has been repeatedly successful in the hands of others." Thru use of the Watson method, Mr. Nolan has been able to raise four successive generations of bees in one summer. He believes that it should be possible to raise one generation a month during the season when bees are active. Controlled mating of the honeybees should, according to both Dr. Watson and Mr. Nolan, produce vast improvements, among others, cattle bees, bees having longer tongues so that they can work deeper flowers, bees with larger carrying stomachs, bees willing to work at lower temperatures, or even bees which are more beautiful.
