PRECAUTIONS NEEDED

In winter weather I see many people, old and young, making hurried little trips without sufficient protection against cold. A housewife will drop her kitchen things, and rush down to the bakery for something needed for dinner; she hasn't time to put on a wrap—and, it's only a short space—three blocks. So she whizzes out barcheaded, and with short sleeves used for warm housewear. She may have been perspiring just the least bit—but that's nothing; she has done the same thing a thousand times.

But—she encounters a keen north—

But-she encounters a keen north east wind—just a little damp, as she turns the corner coming back; it produces a shiver up and down her spine. She hurries in with her purdoes not perspire any more on. The deed has been done.

At bedtime she notices a slight sore throat, with a tickling short, dry cough. Unless she sets in to dry cough. Unless she sets in to work to break it up, she may have it hang on for a week! All because of that hasty trip to the bakery, without proper protection.

This letter is to tell you some little things worth while. You must throw on a wrap when going out into sharp cold, no matter how short the trip contemplated. This applies to men as well as to women or children. Keep the surface of the body warm—that's the law of safe-ty.

I know we used to "tear around" with impunity, but we can't do it now. We have hotter houses and thinner clothing than we once pro-vided. We are not pioneer settlers any more, and hardened to the cli-mate. Careful attention to the sim-ple advice here may prevent a ser-ious illness—I hope so.

SAVING BY BUYING

Many homemakers who believe that they have cut their food bills as low as they possibly can, have really a whole unexplored field of saving in food ahead of them. The secret of saving in this new field is an ap-parent controdiction: "Save by buy-ing more."

of saving in this new field is an apparent controdiction: "Save by buying more."

Buying in larger quantities usually makes for a saving. This is true both when buying large cans or packages instead of small ones, and when buying a large number of cans or packages instead of one at a time. When a buyer pays for two small cans of tomatoes instead of one large can, she pays for the extra quantity of tin in the cans. When a buyer them at two different times she pays for the clerk's handling and for the wrapping paper. Often a store offers two cans of fruit for an edd number of cents, say 25 cents while one can costs 13 cents. On one brand of peas a saving of 25 cents is made by purchasing a dozen cans at once instead of one can a cans at once instead of one can dozen different times

Rolled oats costs twice as much a pound when bought in a small box as they do in a five-pound sack. If a No. 1 Eastern can of tomatoes, which holds one and one-half cups, which holds one and one-half cups, costs seven cents and a No. 3 can, which holds three times as much, costs 13 cents, eight cents may be saved by purchasing one large can instead of three small ones. These examples are fairly characteristic of extings to be used by quantity buy-line. Thirty Years Ago

The summer sun was smiling where "the waters sing as they rush between the rocks," or Ticonderoga; under the basswood tree sat a young Mohawk brave whose sighs were so loud that they disturbed the afternoon nap of a little brown bird overhead.

STRIVE HIGH

. TELL ME AN INDIAN STORY

Income the preserve whose sighs were so loud that they disturbed the afternoon nap of a little brown bird overhead.

To cheer the young man, the little brown bird began the song, "Why are you so sad?"

The young man replied "Because I cannot be a chief and wear a headdress of beautiful feathers."

The song of the bird continued, "Some day you can be a chief if you strive high; think of me with plain feathers, with never a chance to be like other pretty birds."

Cheered by the song, the young man rose. Not many moons after he became a wise and powerful chieftian with a headdress of many colors. He wore it proudly, even down the trail, and each time he saw his bird friend, he wished he might help the little brown bird.

Finally he told the bird that the sun was the source of all color, and straightway the bird flew upward and was lost in the orange sun, high up in the blue skyland.

Harvest moon passed and then the long winter moons, but the chieftian looked in vain for the return of the little brown bird.

Planting moon came early. One bright morning the chieftian heard a familiar song outside his bark lodge. He rushed out and saw his bird friend; but instead of being plain brown, the sky had painted his back and wings all blue and on his breast was the orange of the golden sun.

And the chieftain often pointed to the blue bird and his own head-
