It is an established fact that the greater portion of income tax revenue comes from the man with an in come of ten thousand dollars or less. Much of from men with salaries of much less than the ten! thousand figure. These men draw salaries for the most part and do not enjoy the privileges of establishing fid titious losses to keep from paying income tax.

It seems high time that our federal income tax law is revised to eliminate the flimsy excuses of losses which are now made possible under its provisions. The man who reaps the biggest harvest is the man who should pay the largest proportionate amount of taxes. To prove the fact that our law is not nearly stringent enough is the information that the Morgan firm was compelled to pay income taxes in England during the past two years even the none was paid in this country. | The laws of England do not permit the technicalities and unwarranted excuses that our law makes possible. If the Morgan firm should and did pay income tax in |" England during the past two years, it is reasonable to assume that the firm should have paid income tax in the United States as well.

There is now a proposal to increase the federal income tax 50 per cent. in the schedules on small salaries to raise needed funds for governmental expenses. It seems that it would be much better to leave the rate as it now is for the person that does most of the paying and direct efforts toward the end of collecting full payment from the big fellow under the present set-up.
