ways cloudless.

In those moons, most of the Indian farmers spent their days cultivating their corn, but as with all people, some lazy farmers thought their task finished when they planted the seed in the springtime.

The old crows knew that the corn kernels would be small in the plots of the lazy farmers loafing under the trees, so into the ears of these folks the old crows would shout a lusty caw.

lusty caw. Because they had little success in rousing the lazy ones, the crows flew off to the home of the winter wind, where he enjoyed his summer sleep in the cool ravine in the high hills.

And the crows cawed and cawed and finally the cold winter wind woke up with a start and sent a great cold yawn across the valley, which came down as a shower of hail stones on the lazy farmers.

Up they jumped, for the hail pelted them in the eyes and in the ears, and they seized their stone axes and rushed into the corn fields, busily began to cultivate the ground and with their hoes made of the shoulder blade of the deer, hilled the soil up to the corn plants.
